Senate Group Votes Agency Funds Bill of $34.6 Billion

3 Economy Riders Aimed at Job Cuts Are Rejected; Fight On Floor Promised

By Jerry Kluttz
Post Reporter

The Senate Appropriations Committee yesterday approved a $34,688,308,672 general appropriation bill after rejecting three attempts to cut Federal personnel through over-all economy amendments.

A rider to force all Federal workers to take annual leave earned this calendar year by June 30, 1951, or else lose it was added to the bill. The House-approved rider would require employes to take leave earned this year by December 31, 1950, or else lose it. Neither proposal would affect annual leave accumulated in prior years.

The "one-package" appropriation bill carries funds to finance the operations for all Federal agencies during the fiscal year that began on July 1. Chairman McKellar said it would be called up either Monday or Tuesday in the Senate for debate. The bill was cut $1,395,235,976 in cash and $77,813,500 in contract authority under the President's request.

The committee action on the economy riders doesn't mean they have been killed. In fact, Senator Bridges (R., N. H.) promised to take his fight for a modified economy rider to knock out upward of 50,000 Federal jobs in nondefense agencies to the Senate floor. He predicted success.

Bridges lost in committee by a 12-to-9 vote. His plan would have forced many nondefense agencies to make 10 percent reductions in their personnel, and also to reduce their funds for travel, supplies, equipment, transportation, rent, etc. Postoffice would have been given a 2-percent personnel cut, or about 10,000 fewer jobs.

Earlier, the committee, by a 19-to-2 vote, rejected the House-approved Jensen amendment to prohibit most Federal agencies from filling 90 percent of their vacated jobs. Only Senators Wherry (R., Neb.) and Ferguson (R., Mich.) supported it.

The vote was 18 to 3 against the House-approved Taber-Thomas amendment, which was designed to save 600 million by reducing personnel in most Federal agencies by 10 percent, and by cutting budget funds for rent, travel, equipment, supplies and other administrative services.

Upwards of 300,000 Federal jobs would be abolished during the next year under the two House riders.

Washington Man Escapes Death In Plane's Fall

Orville Arwood, 40, general manager of the F. G. Arwood Elevator Co., 2315 M st. nw., narrowly escaped death yesterday when a private plane plunged 300 feet into the Ohio River near Glen Dale, W. Va.

William Faldosky of Yorkville, Ohio, swam to the sinking plane, pulled the unconscious Arwood from his safety belt, and carried him to shore, where he administered artificial respiration. Arwood was hospitalized, suffering from shock and cuts on the forehead.

Arwood, who lives in North Arlington, was flying to Indianapolis on business. After refueling at the Glen Dale airport, his pilot, Clinton M. Collins of Norfolk, Va., took off, reached 300 feet altitude and the plane's single engine stalled. Collins, owner of the plane, suffered a dislocated wrist.

Bodyguard Knifed

Convicts Grab Gov. Williams As Hostage

Marquette, Mich., July 8 (AP).—Three hardened inmates of Marquette State Prison were foiled late today in an attempt to break out with Gov. G. Mennen Williams as hostage.

The young Governor escaped unharmed in the near riot that was quelled by fast action of guards and State police.

One of the convicts was shot in the abdomen, the Governor's bodyguard was stabbed twice in the back and a prison guard suffered a broken arm.

Williams was menaced with a butcher knife as he stepped into the prison kitchen to sample the lima beans being served to some 700 prisoners.

One of the would-be escapers, Ralph Stearns, 50, of Detroit, was involved in a 1939 break from the upper Michigan prison. At that time Stearns and three fellow convicts fled in a car with former Warden Marvin L. Coon, a deputy warden and three members of the Parole Board.

They got to Menominee, nearly 100 miles south, before being captured.

Others involved in today's plot were identified as John Halstead, 56, of Jackson, and "Crazy Jack" Hyatt, about 35, of Detroit.

All were serving long terms for armed robbery. They were placed in solitary confinement after the escape attempt was snuffed out.

This is how Warden Emory Jacques, who was with the Governor through the brief violence, described it:

Williams arrived at the prison for an inspection shortly before 5 p. m. and entered the dining hall just as the convicts were starting

Swank Hotels Indicted at Virginia Beach

Gaming, Illegal Whisky Sales Charged to 23 Places by Grand Jury

Princess Anne Courthouse, Va., July 8 (Spl.). — Operators of 23 Princess Anne County establishments, among them five leading Virginia Beach hotels, were indicted today by the county's anti-gambling grand jury.

The grand jury returned 41 indictments, most of them charging possession of slot machines.

The indictments also contained these charges: possession of gambling paraphernalia, illegal sale of whisky and maintenance of a common nuisance.

Operators of the swank Cavalier Hotel were charged with possession of a slot machine, as were the managers and operators of the Gay Manor Hotel, Albemarle Hall, the Greenwood and the Warner Hotel, all exclusive hotels at Virginia Beach.

Follow Instructions

The special grand jury handed up the indictments to Circuit Court Judge Floyd E. Kellam who on June 27 instructed the jury to investigate reports of widespread gambling, illegal whisky sales and performances by nude entertainers.

Within an hour after the grand jury presented its indictments, Virginia Beach police seized coin-operated machines in two of the establishments.

Police Chief Reeves E. Johnson said his department would continue a systematic investigation of the other establishments.

In reporting to Judge Kellam, Foreman Eldridge H. Whitehurst told the court that, after a four-day hearing during which 29 witnesses were heard, the grand jury was unable to find evidence that widespread gambling flourished.

Hearsay Evidence

Most of the evidence, the jury reported, was of "strictly hearsay character."

The grand jury said, however, that it had received "enough evidence to justify the issuance of a number of indictments covering the possession and operation of slot machines and other gambling devices."

Court Orders Switchmen Back to Work

Action Follows Union's Defiance Of President, Seizure by Army

BULLETIN

Chicago, July 8 (AP).—A Federal judge in Buffalo, N. Y., tonight ordered striking AFL switchmen to end the strike against the Rock Island Railroad. The union's president, Arthur J. Glover, promptly ordered the men back to work.

Striking AFL switchmen yesterday defied President Truman's demand that they return to work on the Rock Island Railroad, which he ordered seized and operated by the Army.

The Army later announced that Assistant Secretary of the Army Karl Bendetsen had requested the Department of Justice "to take necessary legal action." It was reported that Justice Department Attorney Joseph Friedman was on his way to Buffalo—where the Switchmen's Union has its headquarters—to seek a back-to-work court order.

The 1500 strikers would go back to their jobs, said Arthur J. Glover, president of the Switchmen's Union of North America, "when and if the Government seizes the profits of that railroad as well as the labor of free men."

"The President has said the United States is not at war," Glover added. "Is the democratic President of a democratic country saying that no railroad union can conduct a legal strike in peacetime?"

Truman Blames Union

Mr. Truman laid responsibility for the strike at the union's door in his seizure order. Acting under his powers as President and as Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces, he said:

"This union has declined to accept the findings and recommendations of an emergency board created by the President under the Railway Labor Act.

"It is essential to the national defense and to the security of the Nation, to the public health and to the public welfare generally, that every step be taken by the Government to assure the operation of this railroad."

He then ordered Army Secretary Frank Pace, jr., to take possession of the entire Rock Island system by 5 p. m. (EDT) yesterday. All Federal agencies were directed to cooperate with the Army. Pace was told to use military personnel to operate the road, if necessary, and to protect those using it.

Pace Issues Statement

Pace promptly issued a statement saying he would carry out the President's order on the basis of "carefully prepared and considered plans."

"The interests of the public will be fully protected by the Army," Pace declared. "Every effort will be made to resume full operations of this railroad. Maximum care will be taken throughout to avoid any impairment of normal services. The Army proposes to utilize the knowledge and experience of out-

Only 2 Engines Rolling, Rock Island Reports

Chicago, July 8 (AP).—The Rock Island Railroad said it has begun gradual resumption of normal operations, and it expects all strikers back on the job within 48 hours.

A spokesman said it appeared that only a switch engine in Oklahoma City and an operational train en route from Little Rock to Memphis were rolling tonight. He said scheduled operations in Illinois were delayed by failure to round up enough crew members.

Reds Cut off Yank Battalion; Initial Efforts at Relief Futile; Services Speed Up Recruiting

Korean Reverses Show Need for Enlisting Up to Authorized Quota

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

The Nation's defense forces put their recruiting programs in high gear yesterday to build the services up to authorized strength. Continued reverses on the Korean front made the need clear.

These steps were taken yesterday:

1. The Army announced an immediate call for enlisted reservists to volunteer for extended active duty for a year or longer, as required.

2. The Navy broadened this to include male officers and enlisted men for a period of not less than six months. No mention was made of how long the service might run.

3. Recruiting stations lengthened their hours, with the Marines staying open on Sundays to handle expected volunteers for active and reserve service.

4. The Selective Service System stood by ready to call up men aged 19 to 26 if the defense chieftains find the number of volunteers is inadequate. In previous similar situations, the announcement of an impending draft has spurred many into enlisting and the hope is that this will occur now.

It was understood that the Army would observe the results of the call for volunteers for about 10 days before making a decision.

Meanwhile, State Selective Service directors were ordered to build up civilian staffs of local draft boards so as to be able to handle a draft, if one is ordered.

The Army has a reserve force of 932,000 and the Navy reservists total 1,200,000 officers and enlisted men. To reach authorized strength 547,492 men are needed.

The Army statement said that although enlisted men were sought at present, a "voluntary recall program for a limited number of reserve officers will be announced shortly." Medical Corps officers of the Reserve were urged "to apply without delay."

The reservists "most urgently needed," the Army said, were radar, radio, tank and antiaircraft-artillery mechanics; engineer heavy equipment operators, cryptographic technicians and engineer construction specialists.

The Army announced reservists would serve in their reserve grades. Those with dependents "must have attained" the rank of corporal or higher to be acceptable. All must meet current physical standards.

The Navy statement said reserve officers and enlisted men ordered to active duty would receive general assignments, "primarily afloat and overseas, for an obligated period of not less than six months and they will be guaranteed 12 months of active service, if desired by the individual."

Spelling out the particular needs, the Navy asked for officers in the grades of lieutenant com-

M'Arthur Gets Top Command Of U. N. Forces

President Directs Use Of World Group's Flag In Unprecedented Step

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

President Truman yesterday named Gen. Douglas MacArthur Supreme Commander of United Nations forces defending South Korea against Communist invasion from the north.

It was an assignment without precedent in the history of international organizations. Not once during its lifetime did the now defunct League of Nations seek to employ military force against an aggressor; until now the young United Nations has sought to settle international disputes by deliberation.

MacArthur was authorized by a resolution of the U. N. Security Council to fly its blue and white flag as his symbol of command. Russia did not vote on the resolution.

Authorization Is Noted

The President called attention to this authorization yesterday and said:

"I am directing General MacArthur, pursuant to the Security Council resolution, to use the United Nations flag in the course of operations against the North Korean forces concurrently with the flags of the various nations participating."

So far, except for some British

Troops Green and Soft

Outnumbered, Outgunned GIs Bitter at Untenable Positions

By Homer Bigart

With American Forces in Korea (Sunday), July 9 (NYHT).—Men who held Chonan against the Red infantry Friday night, only to be blasted from the city by tanks at dawn, are asking the question: Since American front-line units now employed are outnumbered and outgunned, why commit them to positions quickly made untenable by North Korean flanking movements?

The actions of the last few days may have stalled the Reds briefly, but the advantage has been offset by severe losses in American men and materiel.

Many times during World War II this correspondent observed American troops in conditions of adversity, but he never saw anything like the bitterness and bewilderment displayed at the front yesterday when the men received their orders to withdraw.

A unit courageously led by Lieut. Col. David Smith, a veteran of the Anzio beachhead in Italy, had slugged it out on fairly even terms with the Red tanks. No one seemed to know precisely how many Communist tanks crawled into Chonan just after dawn, but Colonel Smith's men said they knocked out three with bazookas and grenades. For the first time the North Koreans were meeting an American outfit that refused to yield to panic on the approach of armor.

The unit still had enough ammunition when called on to fall back. Besides, there was cheering news that American tanks had at long last arrived on the fighting front and were even now rolling up the road to challenge the Red armor.

In these circumstances it was a galling humiliation to give up Chonan. The city is important as a highway center. Its fall gave the Communists access to roads running down the right and left flanks of the American force. The whole sector became untenable as Red infantry fanned out on the road network.

That is the big trouble. The Communists have been quick and clever in their flanking movements. The Americans lack sufficient

Soviet Again Demands West Leave Trieste

Note to Big Three Asks Unconditional Action On Italy Peace Treaty

London (Sunday), July 9 (U.P.).—Russia, in a note to the Big Three western powers, today demanded anew that Anglo-American occupation troops be withdrawn from strategic Trieste.

The Soviet note, broadcast by radio Moscow, was in answer to the June 16 note of the United States, Britain and France, which rejected a similar Russian demand and accused Russia of blocking the plans to make Trieste a free territory.

Today's Soviet note, which was sent by the Moscow Foreign Ministry to the Big Three Ambassadors there, insisted on the West's unconditional fulfillment of Italian peace provisions regarding Trieste.

The note further insisted on fulfillment by the three Western governments of measures put forth in a Soviet note of April 20, with regard to Trieste.

That note, rejected by the later United States-British-French reply, charged the allies had violated the Italian Peace Treaty in Trieste, called for withdrawal of occupation troops, and charged the West was maintaining naval bases and installations in the Trieste area.

The new note said, the United States, British and French governments, contrary to international obligations, have "systematically thwarted the appointment of a governor for the free territory of Trieste."

It charged this was done "even

Tanks, Troops Move to North To Halt Drive By Northerners

Tokyo (Sunday), July 9 (AP). General MacArthur's communique today said a United States battalion cut off Friday on the front south of Seoul apparently still was behind lines of the North Korean invaders.

First efforts to relieve the battalion were unsuccessful. The communique said no verifiable information had been received on the battalion's fate later than 8 a. m. Saturday.

Thirty-three Americans reported missing in the action, which occurred near Osan, have returned to safety. Osan is about 30 air miles south of Seoul, where the first contact occurred between United States infantrymen and North Koreans.

The battle between the battalion and the Northerners raged through the night of July 7-8.

The communique said the Northerners kept up frontal pressure with two or three divisions, possibly 18,000 men, on this front where two American battalions were engaged. It was one of these two battalions, numbering possibly 500 men, that was cut off.

The communique said the Northerners drove on south from the Osan sector toward Chonan, 60 miles south of Seoul. Front reports, apparently later than the communique, say Chonan, a key rail city, already has fallen to the North.

South Koreans on the east flank counterattacked and temporarily blunted the advance of the tank-led Northern forces in the Umsong-Chungju area, 31 air miles northeast of Chonan.

Two or three additional Communist divisions were battling in the Umsong-Chungju sector. The communique said the South's counterattack was successful, although the Southerners were outnumbered.

On the east coast, United States and British naval units made mass bombardments of the Samchok area, 40 miles south of the north-south border. It was here that the Reds landed from the sea early in the invasion.

Tokyo (Sunday), July 9 (AP). American armor is moving up "with important reinforcements" to the Chonan sector on the Korean western front, but the Reds still are pushing south after capturing Chonan.

So far there have been no reports of the United States armor engaging the southbound Communists, who had forced an American advance unit into hasty retreat.

An Army spokesman announced that American mechanized equipment had started forward.

Small American advance units ran into a North Korean pocket at Chonan and fell back late Friday

House Cut Called Illegal

Senate Fund Unit Votes District Full $12,000,000 U. S. Payment

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

The Senate District Committee yesterday presented an unusually strong argument for a 12-million-dollar Federal payment to the District.

"Any reduction," said the committee in recommending the amount to the Senate "would be contrary to existing law."

Though the $12,000,000 Federal contribution was set by the District Revenue Act of 1947, the House slashed it to $10,800,000 for the current fiscal year.

The fund will help to underwrite the District's 119-million dollar budget which cleared the Senate last week, $6,000,000 higher than the House approved.

Chairman Clarence Cannon (D., Mo.) of the House Appropriations Committee revealed the city supply bill will go to conference Monday to settle the differences. He predicted the measure would be at the White House by the end of the week.

The Federal payment is the only major District budget item carried in the general "one-package" appropriations bill for all Federal agencies.

The Senate committee's strong endorsement of the full 12 million dollars contribution—indicating clear sailing on the Senate floor—was presented in this language:

"It must be remembered that of the total land area within the District of Columbia over 51 percent is tax-exempt, of which about 42 percent is held by the Federal Government and the remainder by foreign governments, the District Government and eleemosynary and other institutions, specifically exempted by statute.

"Furthermore, from a valuation standpoint, approximately 40 percent of the property in the District is tax exempt, and this is almost double the average percentage of tax-exempt property in cities of comparable size to the District."

The Federal payment, recommended by the Senate group, is 10.87 percent of this year's total appropriations in the District bill. This percentage, the committee report pointed out, compares to a high of 40 percent in 1922 and a low of 9.27 in 1946.

It was also officially announced the committee has voted 10 million dollars to start construction of a new Senate office building.

The committee directed, how-

With June Figures to Come

Sales Tax Returns Higher By $900,000 Than Estimated

With June returns yet uncounted, the District sales tax brought in $900,000 more than expected during fiscal 1950, Sales Tax Administrator Allan F. Brooke announced yesterday.

Taxes collected in June from May sales totaled $1,237,382, Brooke said. This brought to $11,304,048 total collections for the 10 months of fiscal 1950 that the new tax was collected. Even after twice revising estimates upward, District officials had expected only $10,400,000 for the year ended June 30.

Drawing on experience of Maryland and other sales tax States, Brooke last summer prepared a chart estimating monthly collections in the District. Actual operation followed the general course of his graph, but, with exception of the first month, collections stayed slightly above it.

The chart shows that December, as expected, was the high month with $1,610,758 paid. Collections climbed steadily from August ($790,572) until December. They dropped off sharply in January to $983,545 but have increased each month since.

Number of returns filed increased from 9588 for August to 11,593 last month. The number has remained fairly constant for the last few months. In the 10-month period 112,641 returns were filed.

House-Building Project Fails

Pastor's Dream of Debtless Church Ends in Bankruptcy

By Judy Spivak
Post Reporter

The Rev. Floyd N. Bradley turned part-time general contractor five years ago, dreaming of building profits to pay off the mortgage on his congregation's new church.

His dream ended yesterday at a bankruptcy hearing in the United States District Court at Alexandria.

The 46-year-old minister of the First Nazarene Church, in Arlington, was not present at the hearing. His wife, Linda Bradley, told the court her husband is in Florida with his parents, suffering from a nervous condition and a recent heart attack. Doctors told her the strain of attendance might be fatal, she said.

Mrs. Bradley talked sadly yesterday of the project, which grew to include 27 homes.

"Being inexperienced in the ways of the world and building, he got in further than he knew," she said after the hearing.

Claims totaling several thousand dollars have been filed in Arlington Circuit Court against the Bradleys by various building supply and equipment concerns.

Red Guerillas Harass Yanks Behind Lines

With U. S. Army at the Front, Korea, (Sunday) July 9 (U.P.).—The first Communist guerilla activity was reported today by American soldiers.

Pvt. Harry J. Waltenberg, Bloomfield, N. J., and Pfc. Robert L. Brogna, Boston, told of seeing Korean civilians fighting with Communist regulars.

Waltenberg said he saw civilians in three tanks that attacked his unit during heavy fighting Saturday. He said the guerillas also were operating small, three-wheeled motorcycle-type armored cars mounted with 30 or 50-caliber machine-guns.

"They really gave us a hard time," Waltenberg said. "You see some guy dressed like a farmer with a rake in his hand. You turn your back and he shoots you."

Brogna said, "Several times when we did not think it necessary to fire on civilians because we thought they were South Koreans, they opened up on us first."

An American artillery battery a short way behind the lines was reported to have come under sniping fire Saturday from a small guerilla band. It later was repulsed by an American machine gun.

Guerilla units from North Korea were numerous and destructive in the Southern Republic last fall and winter, but Defense Minister Sihn Sung Mo reported in March they were "almost cleaned up."

In April, intelligence sources disclosed that three brigades of freshly trained guerillas were massed in mountains along the Thirty-eighth Parallel. These never have been reported entering South Korea, but it was expected they would be sent south to mingle with the thousands of refugees on southbound roads, if this already has not been done.

Clarence Ryee, South Korea Government spokesman, said Communist guerillas caught in South Korea were "eliminated immediately." He said he didn't know how many had been executed since the war began.

He said the Government had neither jail space nor the inclination to hold captured guerillas.

Australian Air Leader Missing in Korea Action

Kure, Japan, July 8 (AP).—Squadron Leader Graham Strout, leader of Australia's first plane action in the Korean campaign, is missing in action.

Strout was seen to drop wing tanks in heavy flak in a later sortie over North Korean-held territory. That was the last his fighter plane was seen, companion pilots reported today.

and Saturday, leaving some wounded behind them.

The spokesman said no American units now are north of Chonan, 60 miles south of Seoul.

South Koreans on the American right flank were victorious in two engagements against the enemy, the spokesman said. He did not indicate the scale of the fighting, nor locate its position.

A lone North Korean plane flew deep into Southern territory to drop eight bombs on Taegu, the spokesman said. Five of them were duds. Taegu is an important rail and communication center 70 miles southeast of Taejon.

It was the first Red aircraft reported in action in the past two and one-half days.

General MacArthur's Tokyo communique, issued just before midnight Saturday, recorded an ominous buildup of North Korean invader troops and armor a little farther back, paced by 80 to 110 tanks.

American troops along the front, in light strength, about 60 miles south of Seoul, were setting up "successive delaying positions," an Army spokesman in South Korea said.

There still has been no major unit of the United States Army thrown into the fight to check the Red offensive.

The spokesman explained a major unit would be one larger than a battalion (1000 men at full strength), but sometimes no more than 400 or 500.)

The renewed push by the Northerners forced Americans to fall back rapidly from Chonan, a highway town some 35 air miles north of Taejon and 45 to 50 miles by road from that important jump-off point for defending forces.

(Taejon previously has been identified as American field headquarters.)

Field headquarters reported 17 more North Korean tanks had been destroyed by South Korean and American forces. Field dispatches earlier Saturday had placed Red tanks losses at about 40, but there was no official basis for the count.

MacArthur's communique told of spotting 40 to 50 North Korean tanks and truck-drawn heavy artillery that looked like "Long Tom" 155-millimeter rifles north of Pyongtaek, which is 14 miles north of Chonan.

Another 40 to 60 enemy tanks and more than 1000 men were crossing the swollen Ansong River and heading toward Songhwan, a village on the main highway only 8 miles north of Chonan.

Significantly, MacArthur said that "blown bridges and swollen streams continued to be the most serious obstacles to North Korean armored units."

MacArthur's communique said the North Korean offensive was "curtailed" Saturday, while massing in forward areas for a renewed offensive.

Later field dispatches indicated the Reds were pushing on south.

Headquarters in Tokyo appeared most concerned about two big drives by the enemy that appear to be shaping up rapidly.

First, the communique said, was "a distinct possibility of a wide envelopment attempting to cut the main North-South communications line, possibly in the Taejon area."

Second, a push down the isolated east coast, toward Pusan, main United States supply port.

Headquarters in Tokyo said "troop and tank concentrations in this area (east coast) which has been relatively quiet since the outbreak of the Korean war, (June 25) suggest that preparations are under way for a drive in the direction of Pusan. It may also mean a wide flanking envelopment of the main battle area to sever the important communications junction at Taegu" (about 65 miles southeast of Taejon).

The possibility of these two enveloping moves suggested continued caution in committing major American ground and supporting units—including tanks—above the natural barrier of the Kum River.

The Kum cuts about midway between fallen Chonan and the southern strongpoint at Taejon.

The lone field telephone circuit to Tokyo used by correspondents and the United States Army is at Taejon.

American Air Force and Allied naval units were active throughout Saturday.

Fighters hammered at Russian-built tanks and trucks with "varying success." The communique said many tanks were destroyed and damaged, but announced no totals due to incomplete reports.

Naval patrols kept a close guard on the East Coast, where a second buildup of enemy strength was in progress. They fired at targets indicated by reconnaissance planes.

A large volume of American supplies continued to flow to Pusan.

MacArthur's headquarters mentioned unrest in North Korea for the first time. Reports fom the North Korean press and radio releases to the effect that all Koreans were rallying to the invasion were denied.

The communique said there were "growing indications of unrest" reported to headquarters which, if true, would provide mounting problems for the Red regime.

48 of 59 U. N. Members Indorse Action on Korea

Lake Success, July 8 (AP).—The United Nations has received indorsements from 48 of 59 members on its backing of South Korea.

Three others have said "no," two have expressed neutrality and six nations have not been heard from.

Latest expressions of support were received today from Afghanistan and Burma. Syria, one of the Arab League states that have held aloof because of pique over United Nations action in Palestine, simply reaffirmed support for the U. N. Charter with its provisions for the prevention of aggression.

The Soviet Union, Poland and Czechoslovakia have opposed the resolution. Yugoslavia, which voted against it in the Security Council, has not been heard from. Egypt, which did not participate in the Security Council vote, also has not sent a written formal expression.

The other four countries that have not been heard from are Liberia, Iraq, White Russia and the Ukraine.

Yemen and Saudi Arabia, both members of the Arab League, sent messages that did not take a stand one way or the other.

U. S. Holds Raid Alerts At Air Bases in Japan

Tokyo, July 8 (U.P.).—Practice air-raid alerts were held at two United States air bases outside Tokyo today as a precaution against the possible spread of the Korean war.

Hundreds of Americans scurried to air-raid shelters, first-aid stations and antiaircraft guns. A spokesmen said the results were "satisfactory."

strength to do anything about it.

In the late afternoon about 1000 Red infantrymen already were marching unmolested on the road running southeast of Chonan, while another large force was spotted coming down a road on the west flank of the Americans.

The unit replacing Smith's haggard men had hoped to fight a delaying action in the hills a few miles below Chonan. But the flanking peril was so acute this outfit also was obliged to fall back. Enemy artillery harassed the retreat. From high ground on the exposed flank enemy observers watched every American move.

To break contact with the enemy and achieve an orderly retreat is difficult even for troops highly trained in the art of withdrawal.

These troops were not highly trained. They have been living the comparatively soft life of occupation troops in Japan. Less than 10 percent have had combat experience. Their officers frankly admit too little time was spent on field maneuvers. One unit in action here barely passed the field tests on defense and flunked out on offense.

It has been sad to watch these withdrawals. During today's retreat men glanced apprehensively at slopes only a few hundred yards up the road. Jitters are hard to avoid when you do not know whether friend or enemy holds the ground on either side.

Occasionally the men would spray the hillsides with bursts of small-arms fire, doing no good and only spreading alarm up and down the column.

Effective demolition would have delayed the enemy, but this correspondent saw two bridges partly wrecked by explosives and still capable of bearing tanks. There was similar carelessness with road mines. An American jeep was blown up by a highway mine, and two men were injured seriously.

Evacuation of wounded is another serious problem. There are too few ambulances, and wounded must be carried long distances on jeep litters.

The collapsing front compels medical units to place their receiving stations and hospitals far to the rear, and patients must endure severe jouncing on the long rough road.

In yesterday's action at Chonan there were many cases of individual heroism. Colonel Smith was determined no wounded would be left to the enemy's mercy. As soon as a man was hit he was bundled into a jeep and raced to safety, although the only road to the rear was under frequent fire and in constant danger of being overrun.

Colonel Smith had placed his men in good positions along the western edge of the town, using the concrete platform of the railway station as a major strong point. During the night his men successfully beat off a number of attacks, but dawn brought the enemy armor.

They came down a secondary road from the northwest. American artillery was too late zeroing in on them and was able to lay down only a few phosphorous shells before the tanks rumbled across the railroad tracks and cut the American force in twain.

But the troops pressed the attack, and when the tanks had paused in the main street Colonel Smith's men crept up behind buildings and threw their grenades at close range.

Pvt. Leotis E. Heater, of Kennewick, Wash., tossed five "pineapples" at the lead tank and set it burning. Two crewmen popped out of the lid and were shot trying to run into a shed.

American tankmen spoiling for a fight arrived too late to help the defenders of Chonan. Only one of the tanks found a target.

M/Sgt. Albert H. Johnson, of Baldwin, Long Island, spotted an enemy observation post on a hilltop and pounded away at 2500 yards, scoring what he thought was one direct hit and several near misses. Four Communist soldiers were seen running over the crest, and one lay behind on the ground.

Korean Leader Assails 'Inhuman' U. S. Attacks

Tokyo, Sunday, July 9 (AP).—North Korea's Premier and commander-in-chief, Kim Il Sung, in a propaganda broadcast Saturday night charged Americans with inhuman and wanton attacks on "innocent people and peaceful cities and villages."

The broadcast was heard in Tokyo, as was another by the Moscow radio that said the North Korean regime had enacted a "land reform" program for South Korea.

It said the reform was based on confiscation of land without compensation and its free distribution to landless peasants.

The Moscow broadcast, by Tass, also said 300,000 persons in Red-held Seoul held a mass meeting to protest "the barbarous bombing by Americans of liberated areas and peaceful Korean towns."

A North Korean communique broadcast alleged that fresh attacks on American positions in South Korea had netted many prisoners and large quantities of military booty.

Ceylon Reverses Stand On Support of U.N. Action

Colombo, July 8 (AP).—Ceylon's Government last night announced a hands-off policy toward the fighting in Korea, reversing a previous promise of support for South Korea.

Premier D. S. Senanayake told parliament the Korean conflict was an internal affair and Ceylon would have nothing to do with it.

Earlier, a spokesman had announced approval of United Nations military action on behalf of South Korea and said the Commonwealth—which is not a U. N. member—would follow the foreign policy of the United States.

Transpacific Airlift Charters Airliners

San Francisco, July 8 (U.P.).—The armed forces chartered planes of all major transpacific airlines today to help airlift men and supplies to the Far East.

Seven of the West Coast's big commercial carriers went under contract to the military, the armed forces announced, verifying week-long rumors that a Pacific operation similar to the Berlin airlift was in the offing.

The commercial carriers will supplement a military airlift operation of Military Air Transport Service, the air transportation arm of the combined military forces, said the announcement of Lieut. Col. William W. Jones, M.A.T.S. group commander on the West Coast.

Extent of Cut Unknown

How deeply the airlift will cut into normal civilian air transportation in the Pacific area was not immediately known. The armed forces classified as secret the number of planes and passengers involved and their home bases and destinations.

But almost immediately there were signs of at least some curtailment and a possible return to World War II days of scarce reservations and lengthy waits.

Douglas F. Johnson, vice president of Trans-Ocean Airlines, one of the carriers involved, said, "We will curtail our normal charter flights to Europe. We expect to be able to serve our Pacific commitments, but it will be necessary to make reservations far ahead—about three weeks."

A United Airlines spokesman declared every plane arriving in San Francisco today from the East was "about two thirds military."

No 'Bumping' By PAA

Pan American, which already has announced it is considering a priority system for civilian travel in the Pacific, said "Our regular schedules are going on as usual. All regular passengers will be carried. We are not considering 'bumping' passengers."

Besides Pan American, contracts for "charter flights within the next few weeks" were let to Northwest Airlines, United Airlines, Trans-Ocean Airlines, Seaboard and Western, the Flying Tigers (cargo and nonscheduled carrier) and Overseas National Airlines.

Planes from other airlines will be called into the airlift as necessary under subcontract to the seven major outfits. Pan American already is moving aircraft from New York and Miami bases to take part in the transpacific lift, a PAA spokesman said.

French Leader Forms Cabinet

British Reject Soviet Charge, Back Blockade

London, July 8 (U.P.).—Great Britain today rejected Russia's charge that the American naval blockade of North Korea is illegal.

A Foreign Office spokesman said the United States, acting as an agent of the United Nations, was fully and legally entitled to impose a blockade and Britain will "take part in the blockade if called upon to do so."

The statement followed by 24 hours a Soviet note to the United States denouncing American intervention in Korea as illegal and warning that the United States will be held responsible if Soviet interests suffer.

The action against North Korea, the spokesman said, is regarded as "an international police action on behalf of the United Nations.

"The powers carrying out this action enjoy belligerent rights, including that of blockade."

Blockade Is Branded 'Aggression' by Poland

Warsaw, July 8 (AP).—Poland's Foreign Ministry today announced it had rejected the United States sea blockade of North Korea as "an aggression and new attack in the war the United States is waging against Korea."

Simultaneously the Polish press agency announced that the nation's Ambassador to Peiping, Jan Burgin, had been instructed to open negotiations for an exchange of diplomatic representatives with the North Korean government.

The blockade was handed to U. S. Ambassador Waldemar Gallman, who left Warsaw by air today, en route to Washington for a vacation.

Injured on Home Front

Torrington, Conn., July 8 (U.P.).—Joseph Alderuccio became this community's first casualty of the Korean war today. He was demonstrating to his wife war tactics GI's are using in Korea, when he fell, injuring his hip.

Houston, Tex., July 8 (AP).—Recruiting officers here appreciate the spirit of the World War II veteran who wrote that he would like to serve his country again.

They had to decline the offer because of the man's present address: the Texas State Penitentiary.

Red Writers Brand Lie 'Abettor of American Aggression'

Moscow, July 8 (AP).—The Literary Gazette today leveled the strongest Russian attack yet made on Secretary General Trygve Lie and the United Nations.

Commenting on Lie's role in the Korean case, the Gazette called the secretary-general a coward, a right-wing Socialist, a stooge of Wall Street and an "abettor of American aggression" who is helping wreck the U. N.

Six members of the Security Council who voted for military aid to South Korea were called "bloody fools." The U. N. secretariat was declared to be riddled with agents of the American Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI).

(Lie, who had no comment on the Gazette charges, also has been attacked occasionally from the Western side of the fence. On June 19, Senators Bridges of New Hampshire and Knowland of California, both Republicans, declared in a joint statement that his attitude on the seating of Communist China in the U. N. amounted to "craven appeasement" of Russia and he should be ousted.)

The magazine mentioned the political situation, declaring Lie had abandoned his principles in the hope of being re-elected. (Lie has insisted he is not a candidate but has been mentioned as the only man for the post at this time.)

The Gazette is the organ of the Union of Soviet Writers and speaks with considerable authority. Its attack was in two articles, one written by Lev Oshanin, entitled "'Greatness' and the Fall of Trygve Lie," and the other by the magazine's editor, Konstantin Simonov, entitled "Bloody Fools."

Oshanin, in referring to Lie's mission to Moscow last May, said: "Only recently, after he donned the mask of objective arbitrator, Trygve Lie traveled about European capitals on a 'peace mission'. Newspapers wrote much about his 'valuable initiative.' What is such a 'mission of peace' worth after Trygve Lie's openly coming forth against peace and in defense of an aggressive war?

"Evidently this 'valuable initiative' was no more than a maneuver designed to detract attention from the war venture being prepared by Americans in the Far East."

Accusing Lie of "humbly aiding (President) Truman and (Secretary of State) Acheson wreck the U. N.", the writer quoted Pietro Nenni, Italian Socialist, as saying the secretary-general "transformed the U. N. into a lap dog which Truman can lead on a leash."

The publication said the immense majority of the more than 3000 U. N. employes are Americans "and among them are many operatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation." It added:

"Thus every step of non-American employes of the secretariat is under the intense observation of American intelligence."

Lie, the article concluded, had a chance to make a contribution to peace, but preferred "to enter the service of rich bosses."

Polish Radio Announces 'Aid-for-Korea Week'

Warsaw, July 8 (AP).—The Polish radio tonight said "Aid-for-Korea Week" will begin Monday. Street collections will be taken up and all possible material aid sent to North Korea.

Earlier today the Polish press agency said Jan Burgin, Polish Ambassador to Peiping, had been instructed to open negotiations for an exchange of ambassadors with North Korea.

Navy Specifies Grades

Enlisted Navy personnel were desired in pay grades E3—seaman and airman—up through E6—first class petty officer—in all general and emergency service rates.

All applicants must be physically qualified for unlimited active duty. Officers' applications should be submitted to the Bureau of Naval Personnel, Washington, and enlisted volunteers are to report to the nearest Navy recruiting station.

The Air Force announced its requirements several days ago, calling for airmen reservists and prior service airmen to sign up for one, three, four, or six-year duty or for an indefinite period. Reserve officers will be taken for a one-year tour of duty.

The Marine Corps has not yet called for reserves, but its headquarters was understood to be studying such an announcement.

17,000 Navy Reserves Here

The Washington area has a total of about 9000 reserve officers and 8000 enlisted men in the Navy, Lieut. Harry Griffin, jr., District Public Information Officer, Potomac River Naval Command, said last night.

Of this number, there are about 1350 enlisted men and 50 officers in the seven divisions of the organized reserve; 1300 officers and 200 enlisted men in the volunteer reserve and 6450 enlisted and 7650 officers in the inactive reserve.

The Army's Organized Reserve Corps in the Military District of Washington includes infantry, medical, engineer, finance, artillery, signal, chaplain and quartermaster units which meet two or four times a month. Persons may join the Reserves at any Army recruiting station.

The present force here includes 7619 officers and 3715 enlisted men.

Recruiting stations of Washington reported a heavy run of inquiries, but few actual enlistments yesterday in the wake of the President's "draft if necessary" direc-

The Marine Corps station at 14th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw., which usually closes at noon Saturdays, stayed open all day and announced that henceforth it will be open Sundays as well on the usual 8 a. m. to 4:30 p. m. schedule.

Air Force Gets Inquiries

The joint Army and Air Force stations throughout the Washington area had a heavy run of calls, but no enlistments were reported by Capt. William W. Cumbey. The stations will be open Monday through Saturday from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. They are located at: 403 10th st. nw.; 14th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw.; 8th and H sts. ne.; 18th st. and Columbia rd. nw.; Good Hope rd. and Nichols ave. se.; Professional Building, Room 26, Rockville, Md.; National Guard Armory, Hyattsville, Md.; Clarendon Postoffice, Arlington, Va., and Alexandria, Va., Postoffice.

The Navy station at 14th st. and Pennsylvania ave. extended its usual Saturday closing from noon to 4:30 p. m. It will be open Monday through Saturday, 8:30 a. m. to 4:30 p. m., Lieut. Thomas P. Wesson announced.

The District National Guard had few inquiries and no enlistments, Lieut. Col. Robert F. Cocklin, chief of staff, reported. The Armory will be open Monday through Friday, 8:30 a. m. to 5 p. m., and on Saturdays from 8:30 to noon to talk to volunteers. There are 200 vacancies, he said.

100 Phone Selective Service

The District Selective Service office at 1901 D st. nw. had a busy morning with more than 100 telephone calls and many visitors, mostly persons interested in registering, filing a change of address or replacing a lost classification card.

Deputy Director Frank D. Norton called on any persons between their 18th and 26th birthdays who have not registered for the draft to do so immediately at the D st. address and for any who have changed addresses to inform the office in writing of the new address.

The office will be open Monday through Friday, 8:30 a. m. to 5 p. m. and on Saturdays from 8:30 to 3:30 p.m. The Saturday hours may be lengthened if the need develops.

A standby staff of division chiefs was maintained at the Selective Service national headquarters, 1712 G st. nw., and Maj. Gen Lewis B. Hershey, director, hurried from his Angola, Ind., home by car to Washington. Col. Daniel O. Omer, general counsel and acting director, held a staff meeting in the morning to consider developments.

How Draft Will Work

Several facts about how the impending draft will work were disclosed by the Selective Service headquarters. The goldfish bowl drawing has been shelved in favor of an age sequence method since this draft is expected to be a continuing operation.

Men will be chosen by age, with men closest to 26 years old and with no dependents first. Then the boards will work their way down through 1A groups, from the 25-26 group, to the 24-25 group, and so on, taking the 19-year-olds last.

The mechanics of putting the draft in operation call for a decision first from the Defense establishment which would be sent to the Munitions Board, then to Selective Service headquarters, where the number needed will be apportioned among the State directors; then the State officials will divide it up among the local boards, giving each one a quota.

The services hope to add about a half-million men to standing forces, either by voluntary enlistment, or if need be, by the draft. The present combined strength is 1,458,400, while the authorized strength, which the President directed the services to build up to, is 547,482 higher. This number is the recruiting goal.

The draft law calls for all males between 18 and 26 to register and permits induction of those 19 to 26 for a period of 21 months. Washington's 15 local draft boards are at 1901 D st. nw. Other area boards and their hours follow:

Fairfax County and Falls Church, Va., 8:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m. weekdays, in the Jesse Building, opposite Fairfax Courthouse; Alexandria and Arlington, 8:30 a. m. to 5:45 p. m. weekdays, Room 309, Alexandria Postoffice, Prince and Washington sts.

Prince Georges County, Md., Tuesday and Wednesday, 8:30 a. m. to 5 p. m., Pollock Building, Upper Marlboro; also County Service Building, Hyattsville, Wednesday, 9 a. m. to 4:30 p. m., and Friday 10 a. m. to 4:30 p. m.; Montgomery County, Md.; Jesup Blair Community House, Georgia ave., and District line, Silver Spring, Tuesday, 9 a. m. to 5 p. m.

The Rockville and Bethesda draft boards announced late yesterday that on instructions from State headquarters, they will be open full time, beginning Monday.

Tactics in Korean War Likened to Sherman's March to the Sea

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Whoever he is, the guiding genius of the Red assault on Korea is very evidently—like his American adversary—a deep student of American Civil War military history.

For the tactics employed by both sides — and indeed the general military picture in Korea—bear a marked likeness to the historic "March Through Georgia" during the war between the States.

An appreciation of this striking parallel between Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman's drive from Chattanooga to Atlanta in 1864 and the fighting now will give a much clearer understanding of the war bulletins coming from the Far East. Most of us are too apt to visualize the present situation as similar to the major operations of World Wars I and II.

Buying Time With Space

We read of Red attacks winning and American counterattacks failing, and, thinking of masses of troops facing each other on a line, shake our heads in some dismay.

Actually, it is not that way at all. Maj. Gen. William F. Dean, the American commander in Korea, is employing the tactics of Sherman's adversary 86 years ago of buying time by giving space.

It was in May, 1864, that Sherman started his march from Chattanooga to Atlanta. The terrain in northwest Georgia is quite similar to that of Korea—mountainous, with a few valleys offering the only passageway.

Sherman—like the present-day Northern Korea commander—fought down the railroad, skillfully employing envelopment movements, through adjoining valleys wherever possible. He had experienced troops and a considerable superiority in numbers, weapons and supplies—just as do the forces of the North today.

His Opponent, Confederate

Gen. Joseph E. Johnson, kept falling back from ridge to ridge. This forced Sherman to deploy each time and attack. Each time he'd find his adversary had only a thin line of outposts facing him and was not standing for a major battle.

Meanwhile, Johnston was calling on the Confederate High Command for reinforcements and supplies. Trading ground for time, he hoped to be strengthened and then fight the Yankees on terrain of his own choosing.

Very evidently that is what General Dean is doing today. The American outposts that are being overrun and the counterattacks that are driven back never were intended to stop the much-stronger Communist army, but only to delay it. Dean is doing the only thing he can do—slow down the enemy until he is stronger and then pick a favorable spot for a real stand.

Battle May Be This Week

When the real battle will come is uncertain—though some military men feel it may be this week. Only after this is fought and won by the Americans can there be a shift from the defensive to the offensive, and—after a period of buildups—a strategic counterblow aimed at driving the Northerners back where they came from.

To continue with the analogy, the Confederacy's General Johnston was relieved instead of being reinforced. His successor, Gen. John B. Hood, stood and fought at Peachtree Orchard. He was beaten. Sherman burned Atlanta and went on to the sea, breaking the back of the Confederacy.

That is where the parallel should end, however. The American South, by 1864, was prostrate. There were no reinforcements and supplies in quantity for the defense of Atlanta. Today, the United States has tremendous resources and is pouring them into Korea as fast as possible.

The big question mark is whether we can get them there in the quantities needed before Dean is pushed back into the sea. American military commanders here are confident this will not happen.

U. N. Korea Commission To Continue Functioning

Lake Success, July 8 (AP).—Alfred G. Katzin, personal representative of U. N. Secretary-General Trygve Lie in Korea, today reported the United Nations Commission on Korea will continue to function in the invaded country with headquarters at Pusan.

Katzin outlined the commission's plans in a message from Tokyo. It said arrangements had been completed with military, diplomatic and South Korean government authorities to assure the continuance of the commission's work under the changing circumstances of war.

AFL Calls Politics Parley

The American Federation of Labor yesterday summoned its top political leaders to an "important meeting" here July 18 and 19 to map new strategy for the November elections.

First Widows Of Korea War Arrive in U. S.

Fairfield Air Base, Calif., July 8 (U.P.).—The Nation's first Korean war widows—five in a group of 60 women and children—landed here today aboard the first Air Force-chartered plane bringing evacuees from Japan and Korea.

Among the five widows who arrived on the C-54 transport was Mrs. Norma Morrison, Dennison, Tex., and her two children.

In a stop at Honolulu, she spoke earlier today with the quiet sorrow of all the widowed women.

Tired and red-eyed from lack of sleep on the flight from Yokohama, she walked into the Honolulu Customs Office carrying her 5-month-old son and leading her 7-year-old boy. Asked why she was returning home, Mrs. Morrison answered in a quiet voice:

"I'm a war widow. That's why I'm leaving."

Her husband, T/Sergt. Jack A. Morrison, was killed in a crash of a C-54 transport en route from Japan to Korea.

Another, Mrs. Imogene L. Lindbig, 26, of Aneta, N. Dak., said her husband, Lieut. Vernon Lindbig, was killed on the same plane that carried Morrison to death.

Mrs. Doris Sayre, 24, of Racine, Ohio, is now the widow of the plane's pilot, Lieut. Darrell Sayre, and has a 7-month-old son.

Others were Mrs. Naomi L. McPherson, 24, of Ada, Okla., and Mrs. Ione L. Spradley of Tulare, Calif. Gerald McPherson and Glenn L. Spradley were lieutenants in the C-54 crew.

Mrs. McPherson is returning home with two young daughters, Rebecca and Lisa.

Consider Bomb Use, Europe Chiefs Urge

London, July 8 (U.P.).—The United States should consider the use of the atomic bomb against North Korea to prevent a "long, painful and costly war," a group of leading European statesmen said today.

The group also warned that Russia may take advantage of the great German fogs of the fall and winter to unleash an attack on Berlin.

The unofficial group, known as the International Committee for the Study of European Questions, includes former Premier Paul Reynaud and former permanent undersecretary of the British Foreign Office Lord Vansittart.

Warn of "Pearl Harbor"

Their recommendations, including a warning that western Europe should beware a Soviet "atomic Pearl Harbor," were submitted to the Prime Ministers and Foreign Ministers of western Europe.

"Today Russia is encouraging aggression in northern Korea; tomorrow she may encourage an aggression of eastern Germany against western Germany," the committee said. It added:

"Use of the atomic bomb may seem justified if this menace can prevent war or put an immediate end to it."

The report said use of the A-bomb "may appear to be not only justifiable, but perhaps even beneficial" if the aggressor ignores two United Nations warnings to stop fighting and retire above the Thirty-eighth Parallel under threat of punishment.

The report did not, however, specifically urge the dropping of the atomic bomb.

Advantage Cited

Pointing out that fogs and rain hamper precision bombing, the report said:

"This is not the case with atomic weapons, which cover a vast area—at least 10 square kilometers (3.86 square miles)—in which the main strategic target is situated."

The Soviet Union is manufacturing seven times as many tanks as the United States and uses the "proximity fuse" in antiaircraft artillery, the committee said.

The Russians are stepping up production of their 600-mile-an-hour Yak-17 jet fighters to between 9000 and 10,000 a year, the report said.

"In order to ward off the danger of an atomic Pearl Harbor the democracies must establish without further delay an organized system which will make it certain that if ever a great power launched an unprovoked attack on any nation, a counterattack would follow immediately," the report said.

Such an organization, the committee advised, would require a first-line air defense of 4000 to 5000 heavy bombers spread over a large number of Atlantic Pact bases.

[Observers in Washington yesterday doubted that the United States would give serious attention to a European proposal that it consider using A-bombs against North Korea.

[Diplomatic and military sources said there appear to be more reasons against than for resorting to atomic war in Korea. They suggested these reasons for not using the A-bomb:

[Military—North Korea has few if any targets of sufficient size or strategic importance to warrant A-bomb attack. Tactically, the A-bomb would not be effective against Communist troops in South Korea.

[Political—Use of the A-bomb would offend world opinion. Russia certainly would exploit our use of it fully and effectively for propaganda against the United States. The United Nations hopes some day to unify the divided Koreans. A-bombing some of them hardly would contribute to unity.

[National pride—The A-bomb is this country's mightiest weapon. Its use in Korea would be an admission that we couldn't win without it.]

British Embassy Aide Ousted by Romania

London, July 8 (U.P.).—Romania has accused a British diplomat of spying and demanded that he leave the country within 48 hours, the Foreign Office reported today.

British Ministers in Bucharest have denied the charge against R. A. J. King, third secretary of the British Embassy there, the Foreign Office said, but have agreed to withdraw him "under compulsion."

First Marines Load Armor

San Diego, Calif., July 8 (U.P.).—Tanks, trucks and field guns were loaded aboard Navy attack transports today as the famed First Marine Division prepared to sail to the aid of hard-pressed American and republican troops in Korea.

The Marines were expected to sail Sunday or early next week. They will be the first organized ground force unit dispatched to the Korean battlefront from the continental United States.

A steady stream of vehicles started rumbling yesterday from the highly mechanized division's nearby Camp Pendleton base to the waiting transports Henrico and George Clymer.

The division had a wartime strength of 23,000 men, but now is down to about 7000. Marine spokesmen did not say whether the entire division would go to Korea.

In wartime operations such transports as the Clymer and Henrico carried from 1500 to 2000 combat-equipped troops.

Aircraft Carrier Boxer Slips Out of San Diego

San Diego, Calif., July 8 (A.P.).—The 27,000-ton Aircraft Carrier Boxer unexpectedly slipped out of San Diego Harbor today, believed headed for another California port to load planes for the Korean war zone.

Navy officials refused to disclose the destination. The carrier originally was expected to take on planes of the First Marine Air Wing, El Toro, which has been ordered to the Far East.

25th Division Unit Hears Gen. Collins

By S. L. Fishbein
Post Reporter

"We were mud from head to foot . . . and this young soldier asks me 'Where'd you get those two stars?'" related Lightnin' Joe Collins, memories drifting back to muddy, bloody Guadalcanal.

Of course it was different. Here it was the Statler Hotel, the GI's all spruce, a few paunchy and the outfit was now a tradition—"The Twenty-fifth Division Association." But Joe had the flavor.

Which was strange in itself because Lightnin' Joe, the old commander of the Twenty-fifth, himself had changed. Joe was now Gen. J. Lawton Collins, and he was now running the whole army.

The reverses in Korea, getting equipment over there, fleshing out the Army, the draft, the reserves—all the weight of July 8, 1950, now crowd the mind of the Army Chief of Staff.

But for a few minutes, Lightnin' Joe sloughed it off, went back to the Canal and New Georgia, in his green jeans with the two stars unostentatiously pinned over his breast.

His eyes twinkled as he told of Charlie Davis, a battalion commander, who swarmed over the jungle ridge firing his pistol with one hand, waving the battalion on with the other.

"I've always regretted this," the General reflected. "If we were smart enough like the Marines, we'd have had a picture machine to take Charlie's picture when he won his Medal of Honor."

He regretted a little bit, too, moving up into the exalted circles of multiple stardom because it cost him that feeling of closeness with his men which he tried so hard to instill in the Twenty-fifth.

Again and again came out that feeling of pride in the tight combat relationship, which distinguished the Tropic Lighting division.

It was plain that Lightnin' Joe had succeeded here. It was plain in the speeches of Lieut. Gen. John R. Hodge, Maj. Gen. William B. McClure, Brig. Gen. William P. Bledsoe, and Brig. Gen. Everett E. Brown, who were there.

And it was plain in the reaction of the more than 500 men who followed him there. Here in the Statler Hotel now they were clapping and cheering to exhaustion when he rose.

Towards the end, Lightnin' Joe Collins gradually drifted back out of reverie into today, to Gen. J. Lawton Collins, and to Korea.

He reassured his comrades that the Twenty-fifth Division would bring no shame to the Tropic Lightning insignia if it were called to combat.

At an earlier session yesterday, the association elected Lieut. Col. Jaroslav Folda as president. Others named included Lieut. Col. Alan Strock, vice president, Maj. Edward Callahan, secretary, Maj. Pearson B. Yeager, treasurer. The meeting will conclude today.

2 Laboratory Posts Filled

Dr. Miller Dr. Kurie

Appointment of Drs. Franz N. Kurie and John M. Miller to top advisory posts at the Naval Research Laboratory here has been announced.

Both superintendents of major laboratory divisions will take on the new positions as added responsibilities, Capt. F. R. Furth, USN, laboratory director, said.

Dr. Miller, head of Radio Division One, will serve as consultant in electronic research and development. Dr. Kurie, superintendent of the nucleonics division, will serve as consultant in nuclear physics and nucleonics.

The positions carry a Civil Service rating of GS-16 putting them in the $11,200 to $12,000 bracket.

Brannan Assails McCarthy in Home State

Milwaukee, Wisc., July 8 (AP).—Secretary of Agriculture Brannan tonight accused Senator McCarthy of un-American methods in his campaign against the State Department—of distorting information to create "fear, confusion, disunity and discord."

"All the shouting from the housetops has exposed no Communists, brought no traitors to justice," the Secretary told a Democratic Party rally in a prepared talk.

Speaking in the home State of the Republican Senator who has blasted the State Department as a Red-infested agency which follows the Communist line, Brannan said that American processes had imprisoned traitors and removed security risks from the Government through the FBI and the loyalty program.

"It's about time some of those crying loudest against communism took time to join the team that is really fighting communism in a realistic way," the Secretary observed, "instead of actually tearing down the very bulwarks we are building up against it."

Brannan never once mentioned McCarthy by name on this subject, but he called him a "certain high-priced author on housing." This was a reference to McCarthy's sale of an article to the Government-aided Lustron house-building firm for $10,000.

"He'd probably be better off if he quit speaking and did more writing," Brannan added. "If he could find a market for his fiction as profitable as for his article on housing, he'd likely be able to pay State income taxes next year."

This was a dig at McCarthy's income tax reports, public under Wisconsin law, which showed no tax payments for four years due to deductions for stock market losses and interest payments.

Brannan charged that Republican leaders "seek to grasp rule of the country by fear."

"Fear is the line that Taft (Ohio Senator), Wherry (Nebraska Senator), McCarthy, Wiley (Wisconsin Senator) and the rest of the Republican Party spokesmen offer the American people," the speaker said.

He termed socialism "the most overworked scare word in the Republican vocabulary."

He spoke before the Jefferson-Jackson Dinner.

M'Arthur Gets U. N. Forces

and Australian air and naval units, "forces participating" have been those of the United States. A Nationalist Chinese offer of two divisions from Formosa was put in abeyance last week on the ground that they might be needed for the defense of that island.

There have been indications that ground troops might eventually be forthcoming from Australia and New Zealand. But it appeared here as though the burden of halting the Communist advance would for some time to come rest upon unready United States ground forces based on Japan.

There was much evidence that, because of shipping and other limitations, American troops in Korea would be unavoidably committed to piecemeal action against North Korean forces known to be building up rapidly and in great strength behind the ill-defined front.

The First Marine Division, announced more than a week ago as having been ordered to Korea, was still on the West Coast yesterday. A Navy spokesman said the delay in dispatching it was due to difficulty in rounding up ships to transport it.

Air Action Restricted

With air strikes against North Korean combat forces and lines of communication severly restricted by bad weather, reports from the scene of action indicated the defending forces' most pressing need to be tanks and medium and heavy artillery. There is no armored division in Japan, although current tables of organization give the infantry division, of which MacArthur has three, some 150 tanks, 550 bazookas for anti-tank defense and 40 recoilless rifles of 75-mm caliber. The infantry division possesses no heavy guns but does have one battalion of 155-mm howitzers designated as medium artillery.

Undoubtedly MacArthur has heavy 155-mm battalions in ris corps and Army organization, which alone can match in range some of the guns the North Koreans have been using. Yesterday's communique reported that United States airmen had located convoys of truck-drawn artillery resembling 155 rifles north of Pyongtael.

Also in the communique was disquieting news of a steady buildup of Communist strength along the east coast of South Korea. Observers here saw in this activity, along with reports of southward probing movements by infantry and tanks, a possible threat against the United States line of communications with the front and with Taejon.

This line, consisting of highways and two railroads from the port of Pusan to Paejon, could be interrupted by the seizure of Pusan or by a thrust southwest from Yongdok to cut the roads or to take Taejon itself.

A second buildup, in which elements of two divisions have been identified, was reported near Wonju, north of Taejon. This appeared to indicate a drive southward, possibly in connection with an advance from the east, on Taejon or the communications between that temporary capital and Pusan. This would constitute a double envelopment in the classic style.

The one bright spot in yesterday's communique was a report that "all is not . . . serene in North Korea" despite Communist propaganda that "the entire populace is rallying to the war effort."

While the communique, as well as Army spokesmen here, was most cautious about accepting these reports at full value, the probability of political unrest in the North was conceded. An Army spokesman pointed out that an all-out military effort, such as that in which North Korea is now engaged, must necessarily dislocate the civilian economy to a grave extent.

That the present imbroglio in Korea would develop into a long and arduous slugging match was gloomily predicted here in military circles. Already it has taken on the character of a war of reinforcement and supply, with the Communists operating over relatively secure interior land lines and the United Nations forces impeded by a long air or sea haul with limited means of transport. In the race for buildup, the advantage belongs to the North Koreans hands down.

In an indication of the growing seriousness with which the Pentagon views the Korean struggle, the Army, Air Force and Navy said no more dependents will be shipped to the Pacific after July 14.

As usual, the Navy yesterday reported no signs of submarines along the United States sea lanes. This led to further disturbing speculation: That it would be distinctly to the Communist advantage to permit the heaviest possible commitment of United States resources to Korea should it be the Communist design to launch limited warfare elsewhere on the globe.

That is to say, if an Albanian and Bulgarian "liberation" of Yugoslavia, or a "liberation" of Iran by Azerbaijan, or both, is in prospect, the more heavily the United States is committed to Korea the better.

Senate Group Votes $34.6-Billion Outlay

Many Republicans on the committee considered them to be an unrealistic "meat-ax" approach.

Bridges attempted to modify the Taber-Thomas amendment by applying its principle to most nondefense agencies. He was supported by Senators Gurney (R., S. Dak.); Ferguson, Wherry, Cordon (R., Oreg.), Knowland (R., Calif.), Saltonstall (R., Mass.), McClellan (D., Ark.) and Robertson (D., Va.).

The majority vote against the Bridges compromise was Senators McKellar (D., Tenn.), Thomas (D., Okla.), Russell (D., Ga.), McCarran (D., Nev.), O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.), Chavez (D., N. Mex.), Maybank (D., S. C.), Ellender (D., La.), Kilgore (D., W. Va.), Hill (D., Ala.) and Young (R., N. Dak.).

O'Mahoney's Comment

Senator O'Mahoney, a leader in the fight against the Bridges substitute, made this comment on the vote:

"The defeat of the Bridges amendment was not an expression of opinion by those who voted against this modification of the Taber-Thomas amendment that no reductions of the kind mentioned should be made. It indicates only that a majority of the committee felt that the meaning of the amendment was not clear and that it would be administratively difficult, if not impossible, to enforce it.

"For example, it required a reduction of 5 percent in the appropriations for the Post Office for the transportation of things. This reduction could only be made effective by cutting the appropriation for the transportation of mail . . . Again, no exemption of any kind was made in the reduction of personnel services for military objectives not contained in the exemption of the National Defense establishment. The administration of the highly important stockpiling program by which the Government is purchasing strategic and critical materials would have been affected by the amendment to an extent not possible to determine.

"The Veterans Administration would have been seriously affected, for no exemption of administrative expenses were allowed except for those functions directly connected with hospitals, dispensaries and clinics . . . The percentage personnel reduction when applied to the Department of Agriculture would apparently have required the discharge of 350 to 400 meat inspectors without whom Federal inspection would be difficult."

O'Mahoney then said there were so many uncertainties and obvious mistakes in the drafting of the substitute amendment "that it was deemed better by the majority not to tie the hands of the Senate Confereés by an obviously impracticable amendment."

House Cuts Restored

Despite the big Senate committee reduction of nearly 1.4 billion in the President's budget," very little of it would be applied against Federal jobs. In fact, the committee restored many specific cuts made by the House in the salary budgets of many Federal agencies, the Agriculture and housing agencies in particular.

By and large, total Federal personnel would remain unchanged under the Senate committee bill in comparison with a 300,000 slash under the House-approved version. Increases voted by the Senate group, such as 1000 new employes for Internal Revenue and 676 for FBI, would offset reductions in other agencies.

The committee unexpectedly approved, with modifications, the tough House-approved rider to jail Federal officials who overspend their annual budgets and incur deficits. This action was taken despite the fact the committee is on notice that additional money will be asked by the President to fight the Korean war.

In addition, the rider to restrict the transfer of so-called "working funds" from one Federal agency to another was approved without change.

Senator O'Mahoney said that more than 25 billions, or 77 percent of the total budget, would go for "war-connected" activities.

Totals	33,900,208,648	32,504,972,672	1,395,235,976

Totals do not include Administration request for $2,261,149,500, or committee recommendation for $2,183,336,000, in contract authority.

The House total for cash appropriations was $27,346,713,664. House and Senate figures are not comparable because the Senate considered as budget requests $5,198,427,480 submitted after House completed action on the bill. Nearly all of these additional funds involved foreign aid and military public works.

ever, that the Senate Office Building Commission revise its plans with a view to simplifying the structure and to make it "more of a working and utilitarian unit than the present plans contemplate."

Before agreeing to a go-ahead the appropriations group considered a nine million dollar building (enabling legislation authorized spending up to $20,600,000) and another proposal to postpone for another year the start on the project.

Senator Allen J. Ellender (D., Iowa), who led the successful fight against the new building last year, authored the suggestion for shaving the cost to nine million dollars. He said he will carry his fight to the floor.

In other actions the committee:

1. Recommended $2,005,000, an increase of $57,000 over the House allowance, in Federal funds for salaries and expenses at St. Elizabeths Hospital. The District pays the bulk of the hospital's operating expenses.

2. Voted an additional $130,000 over the House figure for repairs and additions to the rear building of the United States Court of Claims at 17th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw. The committee said it had been advised the extra space would enable the court to have earlier hearings and disposition of cases, some of which bear interest against the government.

3. Struck out House-approved funds for a 4.7 million-dollar radio laboratory here for the National Bureau of Standards.

4. Authorized the United States Public Health Service to give to the Bethesda, Md. Fire Department a plot of ground next to the National Institute of Health and to pay one third the cost of constructing a fire station to provide fire protection to the nearby health centers.

5. Refused to reinstate a House-cut $904,100 item for extending the George Washington Memorial Parkway

Harry T. Thompson, assistant superintendent of National Capital Parks, said the action was a disappointment, explaining the fund was sought to begin the parkway on the Maryland side from Cabin John to Great Falls. It was hoped that work might begin next spring, he said. On the Virginia side, the parkway has been completed from Potomac Palisades to 2½ miles above Key Bridge. The two roads will join eventually at a bridge crossing the Potomac above Great Falls.

6 Missionaries Missing in Korea; 1 Reported Seized

New York, July 8 (AP).—Six Methodist missionaries who were near the 38th Parallel in Korea have not been heard from since the Communist invasion of South Korea began two weeks ago, a Methodist official said today.

Dr. Thoburn T. Brumbaugh, of the Methodist Board of foreign missions, said the six were the only ones of the 54 Methodist missionaries in South Korea who were not evacuated to Japan.

Brumbaugh said five of the six were stationed at Kaesong (Songdo), about a mile and a half south of the 38th Parallel.

He said the missing are: The Rev. Dr. A. Kris Jensen, 52, of New Cumberland, Pa.; Dr. Ernest Kisch, a Viennese physician who fled Nazi and Communist persecution; the Rev. Lawrence Zellers of Texas; Miss Helen Rosser, a nurse; and the Misses Bertha Smith and Nel Dyer.

(Mrs. Gertrude R. Keister of New Cumberland, yesterday said she received a cablegram disclosing that Dr. A. Kris Jensen, 52, her son-in-law, was taken prisoner at Songdo. The cablegram was sent by the missionary's wife, Mrs. Maude Jensen, 45, who was among the evacuees to Japan.)

Drives His Streamlined 'Soap Box' to Victory

By Henry Rohland—The Washington Post

AT THE FINISH—David Wrinkle, 13, of 4815 N. 16th st., Arlington, raced his streamlined car to win over a field of 104 in the annual Soap Box Derby down a Pennsylvania ave. se., runway. At the finish he was surrounded by (from left) his mother, Jerry Colonna, father, Noble sister, Pat, 15, Comedian who made the awards, and his D. Wrinkle. David will represent the District at the national finals in Akron, Ohio, August 13

Davis Wrinkle, 13, of 4815 N. 16th st., Arlington, became Washington's Soap Box Derby champion yesterday.

He piloted his streamlined two-tone green racer down the 900-foot course to a close half-length victory over Walter B. Morrow, Jr., 12, of 1415 Tuckerman st. nw., in the championship race.

The Soap Box Derby, promoted nationally by Chevrolet and sponsored locally by the Evening Star, attracted many thousands of spectators to the race site on Pennsylvania ave. se., between Branch and Alabama aves.

Davis thus qualified for the National Soap Box Derby finals August 13 at Akron, Ohio.

Elimination heats began shortly after 9 a. m. They produced Davis as champion of Class A, for boys 13 through 15, and Walter as titlist of Class B, for boys 11 and 12.

The two class champions then competed for the city championship.

Davis had the best time for the day—31.2 seconds—in defeating William Duvall, 13, of 3458 Pennsylvania ave. se., for the Class A championship. His time in the final was 31.4.

The championship plaque was awarded to Davis by Jerry Colonna, screen and radio comedian.

standing civilian and military transportation experts."

Maj. Gen. Frank A. Heileman, Army Chief of Transportation, was given the job of putting the road back into operation under Army control.

The Rock Island was one of five railroads on which the Switchmen's Union called out 4000 of its members June 25. Last Thursday, when the President threatened to intervene, the strike was called off on the other four roads. The Rock Island strike was continued to determine "whether a legal strike can be called in this free country." According to union sources it was selected for the test because its territory was so well served by other carriers that no emergency would result from suspension of its operations.

Friday the union received what amounted to an ultimatum from Federal mediators, but countered with what it termed a "very reasonable" offer to settle. Details of this offer were not disclosed.

Mr. Truman's drastic action yesterday was seen in some quarters as a move to forestall strikes threatened after July 15 by three unions representing 250,000 trainmen, conductors and yardmasters. The July 15 date ends the "cooling-off" period required by the Railway Labor Act after a strike vote has been taken.

The switchmen seek a 40-hour work week at the same pay they have been receiving for 48 hours, tantamount to a 31-cent-an-hour raise in pay. A presidential fact-finding board recommended the 40-hour week but limited the pay increase to 18 cents. This the switchmen rejected.

Traffic Accident Investigator Has First-Hand Case

Police Lieut. William J. Liverman, whose business is investigating traffic accidents, was involved in one himself yesterday.

Liverman, head of the Accident Investigation Unit, was driving his police car south on 9th st. nw. As he passed D st., he saw a friend, and pulled to the curb to greet him.

As he was parked there, George O. Robertson, 26, of 1735 Q st. nw., came along on a bicycle and struck the left rear fender of Liverman's car. Robertson was treated at Emergency Hospital for bruises of the shoulder and hip.

There will be a hearing in the office of the Corporation Counsel July 13.

Air Force Vet a Suicide

Westminster, Mass., July 8 (AP).—Nineteen-year-old Joseph L. Gauthier, only four months out of the Air Force, spent last night listening to radio reports on the draft, then went to his bedroom and committed suicide with a pistol, Police Chief Toivo Tuominen said.

Government Is Old Hand At Railroading

Running a railroad is no new experience for the U. S. Government. Here are some of the important occasions when railroads have been seized:

In World War I—The Nation's railroads were operated by the Government from January 1, 1918, to March 15, 1920, for greater efficiency in the war. This seizure was not caused by a labor dispute.

In World War II—President Roosevelt seized the railroads just before Christmas, 1943, to prevent a strike over wages, and the Army kept possession until mid-January, 1944.

1942-1945—the Government kept the Toledo, Peoria & Western in its possession for more than three years to block a strike.

1946—Seizure of the Nation's railroads on May 17, 1946, failed to prevent a 48-hour strike of engineers and trainmen May 23-25. President Truman broke the strike by giving the strikers an ultimatum to get back to work or the Army would operate the trains.

1948—Mr. Truman again seized the railroads on May 10, 1948, in a dispute over wages and working rules, involving the engineers, firemen and switchmen. This time he succeeded in preventing the strike altogether by getting an injunction. The railroads were restored to their owners on July 9 of that year, after a settlement had been reached.

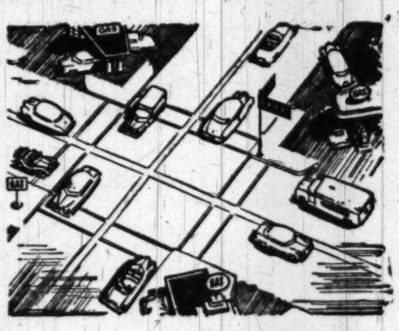
How big are the oil companies?

1. Back in 1910, Union Oil Company was 20 years old. There were 58,000 cars in the 5 western states and we did an annual business of $12 million. This was just about equivalent to the total annual business that any 6 big grocery supermarkets will do today. Yet it represented approximately 23% of the oil business done in the 5 western states.*
*Figures are based on crude oil receipts.

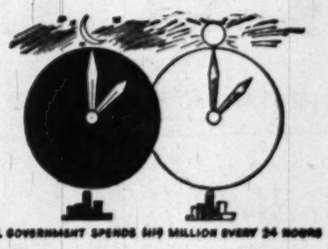
2. Today, there are 100 times as many cars in our marketing area and we do an annual business of $200 million. Yet, in spite of this growth, our share of the oil business in the 5 western states is now 12½%. If we were the only company this had happened to, we'd think there was something wrong with us.



3. But every old, established oil company in the U. S. has gone through a similar experience. The reason for this is that the oil industry—like all American industry—is intensely competitive. As the business has grown, new companies have entered the field and competition has grown also. As a result, there are far more companies in the industry competing for the business today than there were in 1910.

4. In view of all this, it seems rather strange that we've heard so much talk recently about BIGNESS. Of course, individual companies are bigger today. They have to be bigger to serve a bigger country. But the vast majority aren't as big in proportion to the total business as they were 40 years ago. In fact, they are getting steadily "smaller" all the time.

5. If size is a cause for concern, maybe we should take a look at our Federal government. Its "business" is 62 times as big today as it was in 1910. Its payroll is 19 times larger. And it is costing the American people—in direct and indirect taxes—62 times as much.



6. To give you an idea of what this means, here's a comparison: At the Federal government's present rate of expenditure—$119 million per day—it takes in and pays out more money every 42 hours than Union Oil does all year—as much money every 2½ hours of each night and day as Union Oil stockholders received in dividends all during 1949.

2-Front Milk Row To Break This Week

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

The long-anticipated battle over the District of Columbia milk laws will break out in earnest on two fronts this week.

At 10 a. m. Monday the District Commissioners will start the fireworks with a hearing on proposed amendments to the regulations set up by the Commissioners under the Milk Code.

This hearing is expected to begin with a first-rate exposition of the issue by two members of the House District Committee, and at least one member of the Senate District Committee. Representative Howard W. Smith (D., Va.), who opposes any change in the present code and regulations, and Representative A. L. Miller (R., Nebr.), who would modernize both, have asked to be heard.

Seek Early Hearing

As Monday is District Day in the House, when measures affecting the District are given priority, both seek to be heard early. Miller said yesterday he has asked Senator Lester C. Hunt (D., Wyo.) to attend. Miller, who is a practicing physician in Kimball, Nebr., stated that Hunt, a Lander, Wyo., dentist, is equally interested in sanitation laws. Hunt is on the Senate District Committee.

Monday's hearing, however, is expected to be only a curtain-raiser to a more important hearing before the House District Committee Wednesday. The committee will start studying a measure by Miller that would open the local market to dairying sections all over the country approved by the Public Health Service.

The importance of this is easily understood. Fluid milk prices in some milksheds—Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota, for instance—are less than half those in the Washington milkshed. Part of this discrepancy is blamed on the District milk law which bars milk from farms not regularly inspected by the three District milk inspectors. Many farmers in areas distant from city markets are desperate for outlets. Historically they have turned a large part of their production into butter. Butter has been protected for years, until last July 1, by discriminatory taxes on oleomargarine, chief of which was one levying 10 cents a pound on yellow margarine. These farmers now fear that competition from cheaper margarine will take away much of their butter trade.

Sterilization an Issue

Chief among the amendments to regulations that the District Commissioners will consider is one that would permit chemical sterilization of equipment. Present regulations call for steam sterilization.

Eighty-five percent of the Washington milk is now furnished by members of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association. They have held this trade largely because of the steam sterilization requirement. Steam sterilization equipment is costly. Although many authorities declare chemical sterilization is as good as steam, and, unless the latter is handled with care, better, the local producers say the District has forced them to heavy expense to install steam, and it is not fair now to remove that requirement.

The sterilization battle was fought all last week in newspaper ads bought by the producers association and two independent dairies.

The producers urged retaining steam requirements to protect the health of babies. Embassy and Wakefield Dairies claimed the association wanted only to protect its monopoly.

Bruce B. Derrick, secretary-treasurer of the association, declared yesterday that chemicals at best are not as safe as steam. "And farmers, not being laboratory experts, just won't keep the solution strong enough," he added.

To the argument that dairies are permitted to sterilize their bottles with chemicals, Derrick replied that the bottles go through a strong alkali solution and three other processes before they reach the chlorine.

"Pasteurization would kill the bacteria left by chemical sterilization, but it wouldn't remove them," Derrick said. "We don't want to give milk consumers bacterial soup."

Much of the row revolves around the Maryland-Virginia association. Miller and his supporters charge that the group is a monopoly.

"It is my opinion that there is a monopoly and trade barrier on milk around the District." Miller said yesterday. "This monopoly and barrier is fostered and encouraged by the milk association. In the past it has been assisted by the District Health Department. Such a monopoly is to the detriment of the people. This monopoly controls 85 percent of the milk in the District. They have set up a system of regulations in scoring the barns, the dairies and the processing of milk that greatly increases the cost to the consumer.

District Price High

Miller listed the average price of milk, over the country, at $4.36 per 100 pounds, in April. "The price in Washington was $5.68; Chicago, $3.61; San Francisco, $4.22; Detroit, $4.20; New York, $5.20; and Pittsburgh, $4.53," he said. "The price of milk in the District is consistently among the highest. Yet other areas have higher production costs."

Miller expressed confidence that the House committee will approve his bill. He predicted only two votes against it, Smith and Representative J. Glenn Beall (R., Md.).

Besides the regulation requiring steam sterilization, the District Commissioners will consider other amendments to the District rules:

1. To permit the use of loafing barns as well as stanchion barns. Present regulations require cows to be kept in stalls and stanchions when in barns. A loafing barn is a barn, heavily bedded, where the cattle can move around freely.

2. To require all dairies to produce records for Health Department inspection to prevent importing illegal milk.

3. To require milk to have a bacteria count of not more than 100,000 per cubic centimeter when leaving farm, and not more than 200,000 just before pasteurization. Present regulation requires not more than 40,000 after pasteurization.

4. That farm and dairy employes take physical examinations to check for communicable diseases at least once each year.

5. That all farmers furnishing milk to Washington become members of the Federal brucellosis eradication program within two years. Brucellosis, sometimes called Bang's Disease, is the source of undulent or Malta fever in humans.

Later a still wider change in the Nation's milk laws is expected to be introduced in the Senate by Senator Guy M. Gillette (D., Iowa). Gillett heads a Senate agriculture subcommittee that has made a study of food prices. Gillette says this hearing has disclosed that city health department laws, similar to the District regulations, have set up milk monopolies around many of the largest cities. He expects to propose that all milk inspection be taken over by the Department of Agriculture, the Food and Drug Administration, and the Public Health Service, to break down these monopolies.

Plan to Attend Hearing

The following organizations and individuals have indicated they will attend Monday's hearing, according to Geoffrey M. Thornett, secretary to the Board of Commissioners:

Americans for Democratic Action; American Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association; Arkansas Avenue Citizens Association; Bradbury Heights Citizens Association; Chemical Specialties Manufacturers Association, Inc.; Columbia Heights Citizens Association; Dental Society of the District; the Diversey Corp.; Embassy Dairy; Erie Heights Civic Association; Federation of Businessmen's Associations; Federation of Women's Clubs; Glover Park Citizens Association.

Fur, Oil Men Ask Senate Group for High Tax on Imports

By The Associated Press

High taxes on imported furs and oil were urged yesterday before Senators working on an excise tax slashing bill that may be a casualty of the fighting in Korea.

Spokesmen for the domestic fur and coal industries said imports of furs and oil were menacing their industries.

More than a dozen other witnesses asked the Senate Finance Committee to apply deeper cuts than allowed by the House in a long list of commodities now subject to so-called "nuisance taxes" imposed largely during the last war.

Chairman George (D., Ga.) kept the Finance group working four hours in hopes of having a tax revision bill ready for possible Senate action later this month. Many legislators agree the whole plan may have to be junked in favor of broad tax increases if the Korean battle continues to cloud all Government actions.

Pending before the Senate group is a House-passed bill that would wipe out $1,010,000,000 worth of excise taxes while applying stiffer taxes to big corporations. Senators indicated interest in requests for high taxes on foreign furs and oil.

Senator Millikin (R., Colo.) observed that this Government "now is taxing fur farmers to carry on our cold war with Russia and permitting imports of furs from Russia to put our fur farmers out o business."

Joseph H. Francis, executive secretary of the fur farm organization, testified millions of dollars worth of furs are arriving here each year from Russia duty free

U. S. Socialite Slain By Italian Suitor

MRS. ELEANOR P. BLOW
. . . murdered by companion

Florence, Italy, July 8 (U.P.)—Police said today that New York social registerite Mrs. Eleanor Pettinos Blow had tried to break off relations with the one-legged Italian who shot and killed her in her bedroom last night and then committed suicide.

The Park ave. divorcee was found, almost naked, on her blood-soaked bed, killed by two bullet wounds in the head. Cesare Silvera, 25, who police said was her slayer, lay dead on the floor at the foot of her bed.

A note from Mrs. Blow, 46, found in the pocket of the handsome youth, urged him not to call on her.

Friends of the dead woman told police she had been trying to break off relations with him for some time. They had traveled through Europe together last year and had been companions since she arrived in Florence three months ago, police said.

In one note, the youth willed 130,000 lire—$208—to "the beggars of Florence." Another note said, "when the inheritance I am expecting matures, I leave as my heirs the mendicants of Florence."

Six-City 'Gas' Scare Laid to Passing Truck

Moline, Ill., July 8 (AP)—A foul smell choked seven towns early today, sending some residents into hysterics and raising fears of a Russian gas bombing. But the culprit apparently was only a passing truck.

The noxious odor crept through Moline, East Moline, Silvis and Rock Island, Ill., and then spread across the border into Muscatine, Bettendorf and Davenport, Ia. No injuries were reported aside from upset stomachs.

Some residents called police in hysterics. One man insisted to Silvis police that "the Russians are flying over and gassing us."

The evil-smelling fumes routed citizens from their beds and from taverns, almost forced the closing of two farm machinery factories, jammed police switchboards and kept firemen on a near-emergency basis.

The Iowa-Illinois Gas and Electric Co. said the odor probably resulted from a leak in a tank of pentalarm being hauled through the area on a truck headed West. The truck was seen passing through Moline shortly before midnight, when the excitement began.

Pentalarm is an odorant used to inject a smell into natural gas, normally odorless, to permit detection of leaks. The official said the odor is not injurious but can cause nausea.

Several taverns in Silvis and East Moline lost their patrons in a hurry when the smell entered. Muscatine, Iowa citizens jammed the switchboard with calls. Some became hysterical and left town. Others just closed doors and windows and tried to go back to sleep.

The smell was strongest in the lowlands along the Mississippi. Scores drove in night clothes to high ground.

The smell lingered in the Illinois area for three hours, then hit the Iowa cities. It disappeared at daylight.

2 Men Slain In Stabbing Frays Here

Two persons were stabbed to death here yesterday morning in separate cutting frays.

Police were called first to investigate the death of Paul A. Williams, 34, of 1130 Reeds ct. nw., who was taken to Emergency Hospital at 8:30 a. m. by William E. Kidwell, of 1118 22d st. nw.

On arrival, an autopsy showed he had been stabbed in the heart with an icepick.

Kidwell told police he awakened at 8 a. m. and found Williams lying unconscious on a day-bed on the first floor of the 22d st. address. Police were seeking a resident of the place for questioning in connection with the stabbing.

The second stabbing victim was Ernest Dewberry, 39, who, police said, was knifed by his common-law wife, Minnie Johnson, 36, at 9 a. m. in their home at 3 Fenton pl. ne. There were three knife wounds, police said.

Police said the Johnson woman told them she was in the kitchen cleaning fish and accidentally stabbed Dewberry when he came in and tickled her.

The woman was arraigned on a murder charge in Municipal Court. Judge Walter J. Casey ordered her held without bond for the grand jury.

Shaw Lends Rolls Royce For Maid's Wedding

Wheathampstead, Eng., July 6 (U.P.)—Parishioners blinked when parlor maid Margaret Mary Cashin arrived at church today.

For 16 years, she has been riding to church on a bicycle. She arrived for her wedding today in the boss's chocolate and black Rolls Royce.

The boss is playwright George Bernard Shaw at whose home in nearby Ayot St. Lawrence Miss Cashin has been employed since she left school.

Gov. Williams Held Hostage

the evening meal. With him were his bodyguard, State Police Sergt. George Kerr, the pilot of his plane and several other officials.

"We were standing at the back of the hall by a glass door which goes into the kitchen," Jacques said.

"Suddenly, Hyatt, who was in the kitchen, opened the door and came out swinging a mop handle. Then Stearns grabbe dthe Governor by the arms and dragged him into the kitchen.

Jacques, Kerr and chief kitchen steward James Nancarrow stayed with the Governor.

The warden said Stearns menaced Williams with the big kitchen knife. Kerr went to the Governor's aid, and Halstead turned on him with a smaller knife, wounding him twice in the back.

Jacques shouted, "shoot to kill!"

Kerr whipped out his gun and fired at his attacker as guards pulled Stearns away from Williams and grabbed Hyatt.

In the scuffle, Nancarrow was cut on the forehead with a potato masher in the hands of another prisoner.

Kerr was the only member of the Governor's party who was armed.

All the time, Jacques related, Stearns kept muttering, "I've served 2½ years—I've served 22 years."

The fracas brought about 20 more prisoners to the kitchen door, the warden said.

"I kept talking and managed to quiet them down," he said.

As Stearns was being led off, Jaques said the convict called to Williams:

"Soapy, you don't deserve it. I don't blame you, but I've served 22 years." (Soapy is Williams' popular nickname because of his family connection with soap firms.)

Minister Ill; Wife Testifies

REV. FLOYD N. BRADLEY
. . . his losses explained

Bankruptcy Ends Dream

Bradley assets a bank account with $3.50 in it, and four houses, two of which are uncompleted, and another subject to foreclosure.

Halquist also was appointed trustee yesterday, and the hearing was recessed until July 25. Bradley was adjudged bankrupt on June 24, and present proceedings are to determine creditors' rights to his property.

The minister's building efforts began in 1945, Mrs. Bradley explained, when he acted as general contractor for the handsome brick church and parsonage.

There was over an acre of land left, and her husband decided to build six houses on the property, and use the profits to pay off the mortgage.

The neat two to four bedroom brick homes on Taft st. went up to sell for $10,000. Caught between rising material costs and the sale prices, the minister lost about $23,000 in his first building plunge, according to his wife.

Plans 17 More, However

Mr. Bradley decided to bail out the earlier failures by building 17 Cape Cod style homes on N. Troy st. property, also adjoining the church. These were to sell for $17,450 to $18,450.

But the hoped-for profits never materialized. There was trouble with some faulty construction and a problem of stolen materials—like the shipment of lighting fixtures which disappeared overnight.

Exact losses? Mrs. Bradley says she doesn't know. Her husband kept the books himself most of the time—because "he just felt a bookkeeper or secretary was another expense."

She says she does know he took about $1300 in salary during the last seven months, before his collapse last January. Until that time, he also made the $500 a month mortgage payments on the church, from his revolving building fund, she said. She estimated the mortgages on both church and parsonage at about $85,000.

100,000 Belgians Parade Against Return of Leopold

Brussels, July 8 (U.P.)—An estimated 100,000 Belgians paraded peacefully through the capital today in a demonstration against the return of King Leopold from exile.

Led by Socialist former Premier Paul-Henri Spaak and Liberal Roger Motz, the paraders ostensibly were bidding farewall to Leopold's brother, Prince Regent Charles.

But Charles left the city a week ago in a deliberate avoidance of the demonstration.

Huge banners proclaimed "Honor to the Regent, faithful to the Allied cause" and "Honor to the patriotic Prince."

Leopold was declared "unfit" to reign after the war because of his sympathy toward the Nazis. Charles, however, was a resistance leader.

The Catholic Christians won a majority in both houses of Parliament in the June election and will repeal the exile law next week. Leopold will return about a week later.

Dogs Offered 2 Youngsters For Stolen Pet

Eddie and Mary Elizabeth Runnels, whose pet dog Michael was stolen last Thursday, have been offered substitutes ranging from a bull dog to a Siberian husky, their mother said yesterday.

But Eddie, 6, and Mary Elizabeth, 3, aren't having any, thank you.

All they want is Michael—a mixture of collie and shepherd, whom neighbors saw being dragged into an auto, near the Runnels home at 107 S. Patrick st., Alexandria, by a strange man.

Mrs. E. E. Runnels, jr. said more than 50 people called, since the unhappy children's pictures appeared in The Washington Post Saturday.

One caller said he'd found a dog that answered to the name of Michael. But it turned out to be the wrong dog. It answered to a lot of other names, too.

"One lady who lives up near the Zoo offered to send a chauffeur over with a thoroughbred Siberian huskey and two puppies," Mrs. Runnels said. Another offered a newborn bull-dog as soon as it could be weaned.

Mrs. Runnels says the children have eaten very little since Michael disappeared.

Colombian Congress Session Postponed

Bogota, Colombia, July 8 (U.P.)—A government decree ruled today that the regular session of the Colombian Congress scheduled to convene on July 20 will not be held.

Conservative President Mariano Ospina decreed that the reopening of Congress was postponed "until such time as, in the government's judgment, the situation of the country will permit it."

Ospina closed the Liberal-controlled Congress last November and set up a state of siege or modified martial law after a series of bloody political clashes.

ARE DISTRICT BABIES REALLY BETTER THAN MARYLAND BABIES?

Do You Think It's Right For The "Milk Monopoly" To Supply To Babies In Nearby Maryland The IDENTICAL Milk They Are Trying To OUTLAW In Washington?

READ THE FACTS AND REACH YOUR OWN CONCLUSIONS!

You can't blame mothers and fathers in nearby Maryland for getting good and mad!

You can't blame Washingtonians with friends and relatives in nearby Maryland for getting mad, either!

For several weeks, now, they've been reading ads of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers' Association claiming that only milk that comes from farms using live steam sterilization is good enough for Washington's youngsters.

Yet at the same time, the Association is shipping thousands of gallons of milk every day from farms that do not all use live steam sterilization!

This milk . . . the identical kind of milk that the Association is trying to bar in Washington . . . is distributed to thousands of homes in nearby Maryland!

What Does It Mean?

Does this mean that the Association believes that Maryland babies deserve less consideration than babies living fifty yards away, in Washington?

Does it mean that while the Association thinks U. S. Public Health Service milk is good enough for Maryland . . . it's not good enough for Washington?

Or does it mean that the Association . . . the "Milk Monopoly" . . . is trying to hoodwink you into believing something that isn't true?

What the Other 9 Demand

Washington is one of America's ten largest cities.

The other nine cities in this group (New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Detroit, Baltimore, Cleveland, St. Louis, Pittsburgh) require all milk shipped into their boundaries to meet the standards of the U. S. Public Health Code.

The Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers' Association is fighting, tooth and nail, to keep this U. S. Public Health Service Code from being adopted in Washington!

Instead, they want the District Commissioners to enforce old-fashioned sanitary standards written into our laws 25 years ago, before the days of modern sanitation!

Here Is The Shameful Truth!

The fact is that the Association, already enjoying an 85% Monopoly of all milk now being shipped into Washington, wants to make this Monopoly 100%!

The fact is that the members of the Association are afraid to compete with modern dairy farmers using modern methods of fast, safe, low-cost sterilization!

The fact is that only by keeping a strangle hold on Washington's milk supply can the Association maintain its milk prices, which are now among the highest in the Nation!

The fact is that this Association, already indicted, tried and convicted on Monopoly charges in Federal Court, is now trying to extend its Monopoly even farther, and you will foot the bill if its plans go through!

Don't Put Up With Being Fooled!

You can register your disapproval!

But you must act immediately. Forty-eight hours from now, it may be too late. Forty-eight hours from now you may find your entire milk supply in the greedy, grasping hands of the "85% Monopoly!"

Are you going to stand for that?

Do This RIGHT AWAY!

Fill out and mail the attached coupon RIGHT NOW.

It is addressed to the District Commissioners, and it is your protest.

The District Commissioners will decide the question of Washington's milk supply tomorrow morning, Monday, at 11:00 a.m.

So you must put your coupon in the mail BEFORE 6:00 p.m. TONIGHT . . . SUNDAY!

Or Use Western Union!

If you don't want to take the trouble of filling out and mailing the coupon, go to the telephone, call Western Union right now and send a telegram to The District Commissioners, District Building, Washington, D. C.

In this telegram, tell the Commissioners that YOU ARE AGAINST THE "MILK MONOPOLY" AND THAT YOU WANT U. S. PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE STANDARDS ENFORCED HERE, as they are in the other 9 of America's 10 largest cities!

But Please Act Right Now!

If you put it off for only a few hours, it may be too late!

TO HELP LOOSEN THE "MONOPOLY'S" STRANGLE HOLD, FILL OUT AND MAIL THIS COUPON BEFORE 6 P.M. TODAY!

District Commissioners,
District Bldg.
Washington, D. C.

PLEASE consider this my PROTEST against turning Washington's milk supply over to the "85% Monopoly." I would like to have U. S. Public Health Service Milk Code Standards enforced in the District.

Police Nab 22 in Raid On Club's Poker Game

$5000 Bond Set For 3 Employes; 19 Released After Posting Collateral

Police broke up a $2-limit stud poker game and arrested 22 men in an early morning raid yesterday at the Printers Club, 812 13th st. nw.

Three of those arrested were charged with violation of the gaming laws or illegal sale of whisky or both.

They were:

Dave Levine, 53, of 4304 Russell ave., Mount Rainier, Md., described by police as vice president of the club, who was charged with setting up a gaming table and two counts of keeping and selling whisky without a license and released in $2500 bond.

Charlie Powell, 43, of 1216 New York ave. nw., identified by police as the club doorkeeper, who was charged with setting up a gaming table and freed in $2000 bond.

Andrew Bragg, 42, of 1332 I st. nw., said by police to be the bartender, who was charged with two counts of keeping and selling whisky without a license and released in $500 bond.

Levine and Powell will be arraigned before United States Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence on the gaming charges Tuesday. Levine and Bragg appeared in Municipal Court yesterday before Judge Thomas D. Quinn on the whisky selling charges and were granted a jury trial set for August 30.

All 22 men were taken to the First Precinct in a patrol wagon. Police charged 19 of the men with disorderly conduct and they elected to forfeit $5 collateral each.

The raid was made by Lieut. Herbert Wanamaker, Sergt. John Hughes and Plainclothesmen John B. Kline, Harold Cohen and Benjamin Bean, all of the First Precinct.

Police said an undercover man had been sent into the club a week ago and had been able to purchase whisky illegally and had also played poker. Two search warrants were obtained.

When they entered at 3:25 a. m. yesterday, the raiders said, nine men were seated in a front room where a poker game was in progress and the others arrested were in a back room drinking.

It was a $2-limit stud poker game with the "house" taking a 5 percent cut of each pot, according to police.

Before the raid, the undercover man entered the club with two marked bills, a $10 bill and a $5 bill. Police said he used the $5 bill to buy a drink of whisky and the $10 bill to buy poker chips for the game.

The marked $10 bill, they added, was found on Levine and the marked $5 bill was dug out of a trash basket near the bar.

Fort Meade ROTC Cadets Show Keen Awareness of World Woes

By Melvin Altshuler
Post Reporter

Fort Meade, Md., July 8.—The 1369 dogfaces pro tempore who live in the Army-neat, Army-regulated clapboard barracks along Ernie Pyle rd. are different.

As ROTC cadets—third-year college students, most of them—they look a little young. They have a greater, insatiable thirst for milk than the Army has ever met up with before. But that doesn't explain it.

The chaplain from New Market, Va., watching them on the firing range, said they seemed different because they think and they question—because, to put the two factors together, they worry.

Continuing with his thesis, the Rev. William D. Williams, (Major, Reserves) said that as college students and yearling military men the cadets are exceptionally aware that the world isn't in "A1 condition . . . and they're concerned about this."

Korea bothers them. They kid each other about it, but the kidding turns serious.

They're sure Korea is going to lead to another war.

Worry in Private

Meantime, cadet to cadet, the only thing to do is joke—joke publicly and worry privately in the neat barracks while the Army, in a six-weeks' course, shows you what it's like to be both a GI and an officer.

This is a conversation with Cadets Jacques Bernier of 5710 Broad Branch rd. nw., and Stephen W. Ackerman, jr., of 1661 Wisconsin ave. nw. Both are 21 and students at Georgetown University's Foreign Service School:

Said Bernier: "Day to day, the action in Korea doesn't mean much. In school, we have seen this coming for a long time. It's not as if it had come out of a clear sky."

Ackerman said: "It's just a 'rim' action, I think. What we should really watch in Asia is Indo-China, Iran, Formosa."

Where They're Headed

Bernier is interested in becoming a diplomatic attache, and perhaps—"it all depends"—getting a Regular Army commission. Ackerman is out for a State Department job and the reserve commission to which ROTC work leads.

Ackerman revealed quietly during the conversation that his father, Stephen W., sr., is an Army colonel stationed in Japan.

Cadet Claude Robinson of Salisbury, Md., is 26, a World War II vet; a Distinguished Military Student (an ROTC title that virtually assures a Regular Army commission), a physical education major and varsity soccer player at the University of Maryland.

Cadet John L. Lampe of Baltimore is 22, a veteran, and a sociology graduate—class of '50—at Maryland. Cadet William Fisher, 22, of Delta, Pa., is an accounting student at Maryland and—"you'll laugh at this," he said—wants to join the Internal Revenue Department.

Too Busy So Far

The three of them said they've been too busy to read or hear about the Presidential order reactivating the draft. They thought they'd be among the first in any World War III.

Korea is not only a camp joke along Ernie Pyle rd., it is a subject for banter among the cadets' nonmilitary contemporaries.

"I went to visit some friends at Maryland U. a few days ago," Fisher said. "They really kidded me. They said they'd be at the boat to see me off."

Tough Training

The ROTC training is tough, Lampe said.

"They keep you running pretty much," he said.

Cadet Wallace Burke, 20, of 405 12th st. ne., is a chemistry major at Howard University. He hopes to go to medical school there.

"For 20 years," he said, "you follow the same routine every day. Then something like this. It's different. It's good."

ROTC students at Meade are on a nonsegregated basis this year. There have been no incidents; the men themselves say the program has moved along with little strain.

States Represented

The 1369 cadets—neither enlisted men nor yet "gentlemen and officers"—represent some 57 schools, some 30 States. The Washington area is represented by students from Maryland, Johns Hopkins, Western Maryland, Morgan State, Georgetown, and Howard.

At Meade, the training is strictly for artillery and infantry candidates. The boys are now half-way through the program. Six-week summer training periods, rounding out military science classes at the schools, are mandatory in ROTC.

The program is practical. The cadets have fired the Army's basic artillery weapons. They've been out on bivouacs; have witnessed mock combat; they've been under fire.

They have lectures, then practical demonstrations. The class rooms are in the field. They rate their Army instructors just as if the captains and lieutenants involved were college profs.

Terrain Study

Yesterday two of the companies were considering the problems of military terrain.

They'd just had lunch, a pretty good one—meat loaf, potatoes, string beans, ice cream, but not quite enough milk.

They were drowsy. The sun was hot, the ground sandy and soft.

The instructor for Company C began by saying that he wasn't sure what the Army intended after a heavy lunch.

"Sleep! Sleep" the company shouted.

2 Virginians Badly Hurt In Traffic

Cyclist Hits Tree; Father Finds Son In Overturned Car; Two Cars in Crash

Two young Virginia men were in critical condition at Arlington Hospital yesterday as the result of traffic accidents.

Nineteen-year-old Albert G. Wood of Vienna, Va., suffered head injuries early yesterday when his motorcycle struck a tree in front of 5723 N. 16th st., Arlington, police said. Wood is an apprentice engineer for a utility company.

Police said he was traveling between 40 and 50 miles an hour in a 25-mile zone.

James Bumbray, 21, of Warrenton, Va., was taken to the hospital after his father found him in an overturned car on Route 29, about a mile east of Warrenton.

He suffered a fractured left leg and head injuries, hospital attaches said. State police were investigating.

Several persons were injured—one requiring hospitalization—in an accident involving two autos and a truck yesterday afternoon on Route 5, a mile west of Camp Springs, Md.

In Casualty Hospital with head injuries is Marty Saginor, 24, of 52 Underwood st. nw. His condition is fair.

Saginor was a passenger in an auto driven by Bernie Levin, 22, of 4510 Iowa ave. nw.

Wrong-Way Driver Rams Paddy Wagon

Jack F. Brown, 40, of 1416 Irving st. nw., had lots of explaining to do last night after ramming into a police patrol wagon at 9th st. and Florida ave. nw.

After listening, police charged Brown with driving while drunk and driving on the wrong side of the street.

The patrol wagon, from the Thirteenth Precinct, was operated by Pvt. Phillip W. Broome, 31, of 5715 Nye st., Chapel Oaks, Md. No one was injured.

Prince Georges County Police said Levin's car struck a truck driven by James Leo Proctor, 32 of 6191 Allentown rd., Camp Springs.

The Levin car then struck an auto driven by Milton H. Shapiro, 33, of 4219 4th st. se., police reported.

Levin, charged with reckless driving by collision, was released under $1000 bond. A hearing will be held July 21 at Upper Marlboro.

A certificate of accidental death was issued yesterday for Kenneth Williams, 19, a roomer at 413 Randolph st. nw., who was fatally injured Friday night when his car struck a tree and a utility pole at 9th and Farragut sts. nw. Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, said death was due to a crushed skull.

Richard A. Norton, 17, of 818 Crittenden st. nw., a passenger, was in critical condition at Gallinger Hospital last night with head injuries.

A second passenger, 17-year-old William F. Zimmerman, was merely dazed in the accident.

Police said Williams was driving back and forth in the neighborhood to attract the attention of his estranged wife, Mrs. Natalie Williams, who lives with her parents at 4723 9th st. nw. The couple's 2-year-old daughter lives with Mrs. Williams' parents.

Perry McOakley, 29, of 66 L st. nw., suffered minor bruises when the panel truck he was driving overturned at 22d and N sts. nw., about 11:50 a. m.

D. C. Woman Rescued as Home Burns

A fireman carried Mrs. Catherine Rickman, 61, to safety down a ladder from the second floor of her burning home, at 4040 19th st. ne., early yesterday.

Mrs. Rickman was trapped in the bathroom and her screams were heard by neighbors. Firemen put a ladder up to the bathroom window and Pvt. George Plummer, 27, of Engine Co. No. 17 went up and rescued her.

She was treated at Casualty Hospital for shock and smoke inhalation.

Mrs. Rickman's brother-in-law, John W. Burkhardt, 77, and his wife and daughter escaped from the house unaided, firemen said. Burkhardt suffered minor burns on his face and one hand and was admitted to Casualty Hospital.

Firemen estimated damage to the house at $5000.

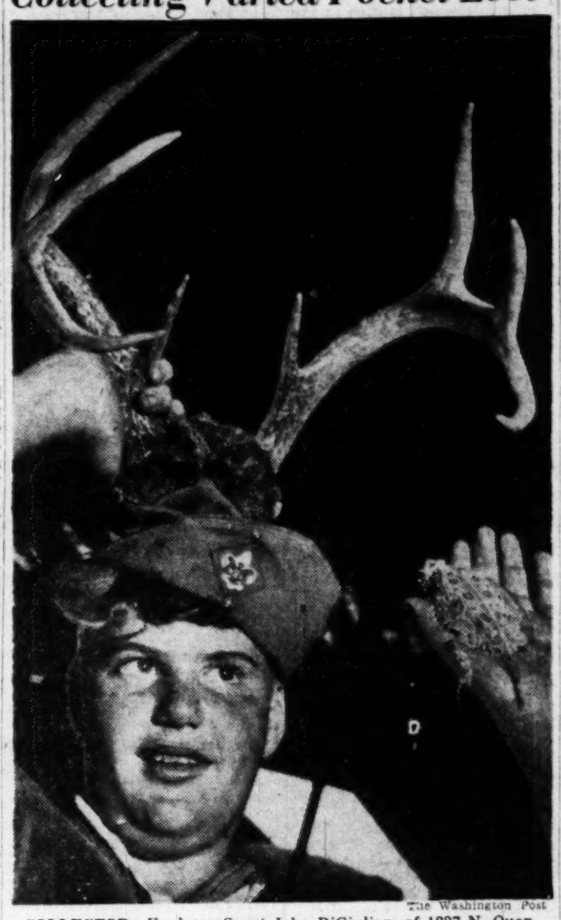
Another blaze yesterday morning caused $500 damage to stained glass windows at the parish hall of the John Wesley A. M. E. Zion Church, 14th and Corcoran sts. nw. Firemen said the fire started in a second-floor choir room. Firemen were forced to break the windows to release smoke.

Man, 40, Found Dead Hanging From Pipe

William R. Walker, 40, was found dead, hanging from a pipe in his basement at 420 Oglethorpe st. nw. last night, police reported.

His 15-year-old daughter, Nina, made the discovery.

Boy Scouts Show Imagination Collecting Varied Pocket Loot



The Washington Post

COLLECTOR—Explorer Scout John DiGiulian, of 1827 N. Quantico st., Arlington, returned from the National Jamboree at Valley Forge, Pa., the proud possessor of these two items, deer antlers and a horned toad. He got the antlers in a trade but had to pay 75 cents to a fellow Scout for the toad

What are little boys made of, made of?
What are little boys made of?
Snips and snails and puppy dog tails,
And such are little boys made of.

Robert Southey, 1820.

Mr. Southey knew an adolescent pocket when he saw one, if any of the thousands of Boy Scouts sightseeing in Washington yesterday were any example. The Scouts were here on their way home from the national jamboree last week at Valley Forge, Pa.

A survey at the Capitol, the Library of Congress, the Washington Monument and Union Station revealed that any Scout worth his Merit Badge, was carrying at least one of the following:

1. Horned toads. The fastest moving merchandise at Valley Forge earlier in the week. One thousand reportedly brought by Texas and Arizona troops, commanded top prices in the traditional swap exchange.

2. Kaiser-Fraser horn buttons. Contributed to the jamboree by the Detroit delegation. In great demand as neckerchief ties with only a simple modification.

3. Troop patches. Worth about three yoyos in the open market. Worn in bunches in a sash across the chest.

4. Deer antlers. A rare item particularly esteemed by troop leaders, with unfilled rumpus rooms.

5. Hamsters. Ranked with, but after, horned toads by the menagerie fanciers.

6. Ground squirrels. Next to hamsters.

7. Raccoons. Very rare. Reportedly only two at the entire jamboree. Swapped to an Iowa lad for three yoyos, two neckerchiefs and a camera.

8. Lobster claws. Used by canny Maine Scouts with surprising results. Prized by landlocked Scouts.

In Bridge Jam

New Traffic Rules Set On 14th St.

District traffic officials have agreed on three traffic changes on 14th st. sw., at C and D sts., to speed up the flow of rush hour vehicles moving north off the new Highway Bridge.

At present, rush hour cars may be backed up from the C st. traffic light for two or three blocks.

District Traffic Director George E. Keneipp said he will ask the District Commissioners to:

(1) Prohibit southbound traffic from turning left off 14th st. sw. into C st.; (2) Make D st., sw., one-way for eastbound traffic between 14th and 12th sts.; (3) Install a traffic light at 14th and D sts., sw.

Traffic counts released by District Highway Director J. N. Robertson yesterday showed that the daily vehicle load now carried by the two bridges is about 16,000 higher than the old single bridge formerly carried.

Boy Drowns On Potomac Fishing Trip

Fifteen-year-old Sherley Thomas Mizzell, of 1434 C st. se., drowned in the Potomac early last night after he fell into the river while fishing with three pals on the Virginia bank, 100 yards upstream from Chain Bridge.

Harbor Police and 46 men from the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Rescue Squad failed in attempts to recover the body. Hundreds of spectators watched from the bridge.

Young Mizzell's three friends also watched—one of them sobbing—from the slippery rocks down which the boy tumbled.

Police said the dead boy's companions were Leroy, 17; James, 18, and John Johnson, 24, brothers, of 1524 D st. se.

The accident occurred shortly after 6 p. m. The Johnson brothers called police from a service station just off the Arlington County end of the span.

In addition to Harbor Police, two Seventh Precinct scoutcars and a fire department ambulance responded.

The Bethesda-Chevy Chase Squad dispatched an ambulance, a station wagon containing a portable boat and the squad's rescue truck.

Census Count Changes D. C. Vital Records

Death Rate Jumps When New Figures Are Used Here

One effect of the Census Bureau's head count here was to play hob with the District Health Departments records of vital statistics.

In the week ending July 1, the city's death rate jumped from 10.5 to 11.4 per 1000 population. This did not mean an unusually large number of deaths that week, Health Officer Daniel L. Seckinger explained yesterday, but rather that the department had overestimated the city's population.

Birth and death rates issued the previous week had been based on an estimated population of 870,000. But with release of preliminary census figures, these had to be adjusted to a population of about 795,000. As a result, both rates increased without an actual increase in births or deaths.

Before the correction for population was put in, the District's death rate for the first six months of 1950 was lower than that for the same period in 1949—10.5 to 11.1 per 1000. These figures—not corrected for out-of-town residents—were included in the Health Department's preliminary vital statistics report for the first half of 1950. The report also made these comparisons — not corrected for residence — between the first six months of 1949 and 1950:

(1) Number of births recorded in the District was higher in 1950 —12,442 to 12,333. The increase was due entirely to Negro births which increased by 121, while white births dropped by 12.

(2) Infant mortality rate dropped from the 1949 figure of 28.1 per 1000 live births to 26.8. There were 13 fewer deaths this year.

(3) Number of cases of communicable diseases reported this year was 1087 less than in 1949.

Disabled Engineer Not Found for an Hour

An electrical engineer for the Capitol Theater lay disabled on the basement floor for over an hour last night before he managed to summon aid by knocking over a telephone.

William G. Allen, 32, of 3810 V st. se., was jolted to the floor by an electrical shock, injuring his back, right shoulder and leg. He was admitted to Emergency Hospital, where his condition was undetermined.

School Age Population In Arlington Rises 20 Pct.

18,447 Children in 6-17 Age Bracket; Increase of 3024 In Last 2 Years

Arlington's school-age children have increased by almost 20 percent in the past two years, and the school population will rise over the next four years by 1500 to 2000 pupils annually, the Arlington School Board was told yesterday.

These figures were presented to the board at a regular meeting in the Thomas Jefferson Junior High School as preliminary results of the 1950 school census ordered by the board.

School board members said the figures indicated that their proposed $18 million building program over the next six years would just about cover indicated classroom needs.

18,447 Between 6 and 17

The present schoolage population totals 18,447 children in the ages of 6 to 17, inclusive, an increase of 3024 over the 15,423 in 1948, according to the figures presented by Edward W. Paulette, researcher who directed the census.

Other figures showed that the Arlington school system would lose about 2000 students through graduation during the next two school years, while gaining more than 5000 new pupils now aged 4 and 5. The average net increase would be more than 1500 a year.

School Board Member Barnard Joy estimated the annual increase in the school population during the following four years, 1952-56, would be at least 2000 pupils, as indicated by census figures.

Joy pointed out that of the 3024 school-age children added by Arlington in the past two years, almost 2000 are in the ages of 6 through 8.

Six Million Dollars Required

A financial statement issued by the county yesterday indicates that during the two-year fiscal period beginning July 1 this year, the school program will require about six million dollars and the general county improvement program about two and a half million.

The statement declares that about 100 elementary school classrooms, a junior high school and a senior high school will be needed during the 1952-54 period, at an estimated cost of three million dollars.

Bids on a $2,250,000 bond issue for construction at Washington-Lee and Hoffman-Boston High Schools will be opened at 10 a. m. Thursday at the school board office. This is the last step in selling $4,750,000 in bonds authorized by the voters in November, 1948.

At yesterday's meeting, the board voted to buy some 115,000 square feet of land at Quincy st. and 13th st. N, where a new Washington-Lee High School cafeteria is to be built, for $47,866.

Objection to Price

Curtis E. Tuthill, board member, objected to the price fixed by Curtis I. Gilbert, owner of the land and of a home on the property.

Edward J. Braun, assistant school superintendent and clerk of the board, had explained that a school board appraisal had set the value of the property at $46,000. He recommended purchase at Gilbert's price because condemnation would cost more, he said.

Chairman Mrs. Elizabeth P. Campbell, Colin C. McPherson, E. R. Draheim and Joy agreed with Braun's recommendation.

D.C. Personal Property Tax Due July 31

District taxpayers have two matters to attend to before August 1—filing personal property tax returns and buying new dog tags.

The District Assessor's office issued a reminder yesterday that returns must be filed by all individuals and businesses owning tangible personal property in the District.

Individuals must list household effects and businesses must list furnishings, equipment and merchandise. A penalty equivalent to 20 percent of the tax due may be imposed for failure to file by the July 31 deadline.

Tax bills will be sent out the latter part of August, tax officials said, and may be paid in semi-annual installments in September and March.

Persons who did not file last year may obtain tax forms at Room 215 in the District Building or request them by mail, officials said. Forms are mailed automatically to those who filed in 1949.

District Tax Collector Guy W. Pearson said applications for dog tags may be obtained at Room 120 in the District Building, Room 1000 at the Municipal Center, the District Pound at South Capitol and I sts., or at any police precinct station. The tags may then be purchased for $3 at either Room 120 or 1000.

Area Polio Totals Top 1949 Figures

A somewhat reassuring picture of polio this season is seen in the latest national statistics. But local statistics are not as reassuring.

The national figures show that even though new cases are running above normal, the totals are below last year's numbers for the same period.

The relatively few cases recorded locally, however, show an even greater incidence of the disease in the District and adjoining counties than last season's totals at the same date. The numbers are too small to be "statistically significant," health officials said.

For the week ending July 1, there were 391 new cases of poliomyelitis recorded throughout the Nation, according to official figures released here. This compares to 481 recorded during the corresponding week of 1949.

For the current "disease year," beginning near the end of March, the cumulative polio toll this year to July 1 was 2053 new cases, or 218 fewer than for the same period of 1949. The polio "disease year" is the recommended guide for incidence comparison.

Comparisons made on the basis of calendar years, polio statisticians say, are virtually meaningless. For instance, they pointed out, the 3187 new polio cases recorded this year since January 1 would give the "false impression" that the disease is even more rampant now than during 1949's record epidemic year. In the first six months of 1949 there were 3186 cases recorded under the calendar system.

In the District of Columbia, three new polio cases were recorded during the week ending July 1, in comparison to only one case entered in the corresponding week of 1949. The District's cumulative total in the current "disease year" is seven, compared to three cases in the same period last year.

Virginia showed eight new cases the same week, as against four in the corresponding week of 1949. The State's cumulative "disease year" total is 19, with 7 noted for the same period last year.

Three of Virginia's eight newest cases were recorded in the area adjoining Washington. They include an 8-year-old Alexandria boy, a 6-year-old girl from Jefferson Manor, Fairfax County, and a 12-year-old girl from the 700 block of S. 25th st., Arlington. All were admitted to Children's Hospital, here.

Maryland, the national statistics showed, had one new case during the week ending July 1, when a 6½-year-old Capital Heights boy was stricken on June 29. The State's total for the current "disease year" is four cases, as against five recorded for the 1949 period.

F. W. Pearce Rites Today In Maryland

Funeral services for Frederick W. Pearce, 83, a Public Roads Administration accountant for 20 years who died of a cerebral stroke Friday, will be held at 3 p. m. today at the Takoma Park Baptist Church.

Mr. Pearce died in Sibley Hospital after being stricken a week ago at his home, 2122 California st. nw.

A native of Kentucky, Mr. Pearce came to Takoma Park in 1917 and lived there until a year ago. For 20 years he served on the District—now National Capital Area—Council of Boy Scouts, and was a charter member of the Takoma Park Baptist Church.

During the First World War, Mr. Pearce served as a gun inspector for the Army Ordnance Division, and joined the Public Roads Administration, now the Bureau of Public Roads, in 1920. At the time of his retirement in 1939 he was in charge of engineering records.

New Drug May End Surgery for Ulcers

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

Clinical success with a new drug that gives dramatic pain relief from peptic ulcers and should end "most" surgery for such cause was reported yesterday.

The drug, banthine, taken by mouth, proved generally effective even where rest cures and special diets were banished during its trial treatments, investigators noted.

The trials were performed on a series of 100 patients at Duke University Hospital, Durham, N. C., and the results reported in the current issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Virtually all the patients, the doctors said, were considered candidates for surgery since all other conventional treatments had failed them. Instead, they were given the new drug, four to six doses daily for extended periods.

Results Summarized

Summing up results, the doctors noted:

"Early experiences indicate that by its (banthine's) use most patients having serious disability from ulcer can avoid surgical operation."

The investigators included Drs. Keith S. Grimson, C. Keith Lyons and Robert J. Reeves, all of Duke University's department of surgery and radiology.

Because of the favorable results, they said, distribution of the drug is planned in order that physicians may use it in general practice.

Of the 100 patients reported, 89 suffered from duodenal ulcers, six had jejunal ulcer following operations on the stomach, two had gastric ulcers and two others channel ulcers, and one suffered a perforating ulcer of the stomach wall.

Only Five Operations

Only five of the 100 eventually needed operations for their condition, though 55 initially met even conventional conservative indications for surgery, they said.

The other 95, with two exceptions not yet completely relieved, have continued regular work or, those incapacitated before banthine treatment, have returned to regular work.

Because the drug works so fast in relieving ulcer pain, ulcer healing processes were periodically checked by X-ray photographs rather than patient complaint response. Generally, the doctors reported, the first dose of banthine promply ended the ulcer pain.

Some Pain Later

In some instances, they noted, pain relief was not immediate. And in some, pain returned fleetingly several days after the treatment's start or subsequently during periods of emotional strain.

"Because of these occasional recurrences," they reported, "each patient is now instructed to resume therapeutic doses of banthine as a prophylactic measure against recurrence when conditions of tension, strain or illness develop."

On Retirement

H. T. Colvin Gets Praise From Ching

HOWARD T. COLVIN
. . . . retiring conciliator

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

"If the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service had not had a Howard T. Colvin, it would have had to create one."

That's how Cyrus S. Ching, chief Federal conciliator, described his associate director this weekend, in announcing Colvin's retirement at the end of July.

True, Ching and his staff will be able to call on the wisdom and lore of the affable, gracious little Virginian as a "special consultant". Even so, the third floor of the Labor Department Building's west wing won't look the same without the daily presence—six days a week—of the elfin associate director, his endless chain of cigars, his calm demeaner in the midst of national emergency strike tension.

He's "Mr. Conciliation"

Some of the younger men—Colvin's retiring because he's hit 70, albeit his shock of gray hair and his bouncy stride belie his age—refer to Colvin as "Mr. Conciliation." Colvin has been with the service, in and out of the Labor Department, for some 20 years. He is steeped in its traditions and history. He is a ready mine of information.

Colvin's handled hundreds of management-labor strikes and disputes in his time . . . coal . . . steel . . . maritime . . . public utilities . . . He possesses rare qualities according to Ching, excellent in the makeup of a conciliator. He always looks for the best in people—Ching observes—and usually finds it.

Again, Colvin is an unexcitable fellow, one of those individuals who never loses his temper. After a whole day and night of mediation, Colvin will emerge, his collar unsoiled, even though the negotiators—20 years younger—have wilted by sunup.

Reassuring Cigars

There's something reassuring about Colvin's one-after-another cigars, and his endless attempts to keep them lit. He's been given at least a dozen lighters of one kind or another, but Colvin insists upon scratching matches. He relights the cigar as it sputters out, without getting perturbed, even as he rekindles peace negotiations when patience runs out around the conciliation table.

Howard Colvin was born in Fauquier County, Va., but was raised in Washington and taught in its public schools. At the age of 20, though, he moved to Alexandria, and has lived there since. He resides at 10 West Oak st. with his wife. They have one daughter, three grandchildren, two great-grandchildren.

Colvin was 24 when he got his first taste at settling a management-labor dispute. At the time he was a member of the Railway Clerks Brotherhood and secretary of the Alexandria Central Labor Union. There was a stalemate between the AFL brewery workers local and an Alexandria brewery. Employer and union agreed on settling the dispute through arbitration.

Testimonial to Fairness

Ordinarily, such a procedure calls for each side to pick an arbitrator, and the two selectees name a third neutral arbitrator. But when the union announced Colvin to be its artitrator, the brewery also named Colvin.

The labor activities of Colvin were not confined to Alexandria. He worked for a while as a paperhanger in Washington, and was a member of the painters' union. In due course he was elected president of both Alexandria and Washington Central Labor Unions. Meanwhile, he was also active as a member of the Alexandria Chamber of Commerce.

In June of 1930, Colvin resigned as president of the CLU here to join the conciliation service. At that very meeting a new delegate, Clyde M. Mills, appeared to represent the Typographical Union. It was the first time that Mills, a Washingtonian, had met Colvin.

Ching Pays Him Tribute

Last Friday, on the very day Colvin's retirement was announced, the Conciliation Service also announced the promotion of Mills to be assistant director. When Colvin leaves at the end of the month, Mills will succeed him as the service's No. 2 conciliator.

Colvin has no simple formula for conciliating disputes. "Can't blueprint a settlement," he says. "The key factor is in the personalities of the negotiators. The conciliator has to size up the personalities and start off from there.

Conciliation Chief Ching commented in announcing Colvin's retirement:

"The history of the U. S. Conciliation Service, and the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, is the story, to a remarkable extent, of the career of Howard T. Colvin—his philosophy of labor-management relations, his friendships, his sense of equity and fair dealing, and his numerous contributions to industrial peace."

Democrats Reveal Montgomery Slate

A complete slate of 38 candidates for county offices and five for State positions was "recommended" yesterday by the Democratic Victory Committee of Montgomery County.

The committee, headed by Mayor G. LaMar Kelly, jr., of Rockville, was formed last September to "revitalize" the party in the county.

Its recommendations on policy, which included opening of party deliberations to rank and file members and naming precinct leaders by election rather selection, were subsequently adopted by the Democratic State Central Committee.

No Primary Choices

In December the central committee announced it would not directly indorse any primary candidates, but would leave their selection to the party as a whole.

Selection of the slate was made, Kelly announced, on the basis of replies to letters sent 850 party members asking recommendations.

A unanimous demand for Governor William Preston Lane, jr., Attorney General Hall Hammond, Comptroller Millard Tawes and United States Senator Millard Tydings was received, Kelly said, not a single other candidate being mentioned. Russell P. Hartle of Hagerstown received committee support for the House of Representatives.

Sentiment was evenly divided between Trial Magistrates Alger Y. Barbee and James R. Miller for State's Attorney, Kelly said. Miller, a member of the committee stepped aside voluntarily and asked that Barbee be indorsed unanimously, he said.

What's Wrong With THIS?

Best MILK In The World

HERE ARE THE FACTS . . . your District Milk is:

1 1/3¢ LESS . . .

Average District price for delivered milk is 20.8 cents a quart during 1949 as compared to 21.1 cents a quart average for 56 cities across the country.

2 PUREST ON EARTH . . .

Live steam sterilization of all milk handling equipment plus rigid health controls makes our milk superior in purity to all other sources of supply.

3 PLENTIFUL FOR EVERYBODY'S NEEDS

All the clean, sweet, pure milk you and your family can drink is available from 1700 dairy farms using live-steam sterilization. Other farmers can also supply the District if they meet the simple and sure steam sterilization requirements.

Of course, you would not like to break down this high milk-for-health standard—but a few others would. Why? You know the answer. FOR PROFIT That's why there's so much talk about permanently letting down the bars to dairy farmers who do not use steam sterilization of milk utensils. A small amount of milk from farms using chemical methods to sterilize milk handling equipment has been allowed to enter the District temporarily. The chemical swishers want this temporary measure to become permanent. It's time to "do something about it" or you will no longer have the best milk in the country.

Here's What You Can Do to Help—

On Monday, July 10, a hearing will be held by the District Commissioners on making the temporary acceptance of chemical sterilization permanent. For your family's sake, you should go to the hearing, or send a representative from your church or club. The Commissioners are interested in your welfare, so speak up and let them know that sweet, clean, pure milk—through live-steam sterilization—is of vital interest to you and your family.

More than 1700 dairy farmers have paid for this advertisement. These are the farmers who have spent their money to put in live-steam sterilization. They are not trying to keep other farmers from selling milk in the District. They are asking that all dairy farmers who send milk to the District be required to use steam-sterilizing methods. By keeping milk handling equipment CLEAN, your health is protected. Please see to it that all dairy farmers are forced to do what we do to protect your milk supply.

O'Connell Resigns As CAB Chairman

JOSEPH. J. O'CONNELL, JR.
. . . to return to private life

By The Associated Press

Joseph J. O'Connell, jr., yesterday resigned as Civil Aeronautics Board chairman with White House action pending on one of the board's most bitterly fought cases.

The case is the proposed sale of American Overseas Airline to its transatlantic competitor, Pan American World Airways, for $17,450,000. A board majority including O'Connell is understood to have opposed the sale. The board's decision has been at the White House since early June.

O'Connell's letter to President Truman, dated June 13, said only that he wished to return to private life for personal reasons. It recalled he discussed this with Mr. Truman last November but agreed to stay until an appropriate time.

In addition to heading the CAB, O'Connell was chairman of the Air Coordinating Committee, the Government's top aviation policy group.

O'Connell declined to expand on his reasons for quitting. There have been reports in the aviation field that O'Connell was unhappy with White House handling of the merger case. The board majority is said to have voted 3 to 2 to reject the proposed sale.

However, all CAB decisions involving international aviation are subject to presidential approval. The President has reversed the board in important cases before.

There also have been reports that O'Connell was disturbed by failure of other members of the board to act decisively in cases where a delay has embarrassed the board. In addition to the merger case, one of these is the Parks investigation case, which involves a decision whether to distribute among other airlines routes awarded to Parks Airline but not operated by it.

O'Connell still had three and a half years to serve in the $15,000-a-year job. A former general counsel of the Treasury Department, he resigned from the law firm of Gardner, Morrison and Rogers in April, 1948, to take the CAB chairmanship after only eight months in private law practice. O'Connell had had no experience in aviation.

Under O'Connell's leadership, the board had adopted long-range policies credited with helping the airlines out of the 1948 slump and setting up a course for future operations on a basis that industry leaders have praised on many occasions.

However, O'Connell had been sharply criticized by irregular or nonscheduled operators. In the past few months he had joined with the board in tightening the rules under which they operate.

Oswald Ryan, vice chairman of the CAB will serve as acting chairman until O'Connell's successor is selected.

World Church Steering Body Opens Meeting

Toronto, Ont., July 8 (AP).—Protestant and Orthodox church leaders gathered here today to begin a week-long study of worldwide religious problems.

The occasion is the annual meeting of the 90-member central committee of the World Council of Churches. The council includes about 160 million church members in 44 countries of all major Christian confessions except Roman Catholicism.

These are some of the problems on which the delegates will act:

Minority church rights in countries dominated by a single state-recognized religious group. Christian judgments on existing political and social systems. Means of bringing the Christian gospel to large industrial populations. Defining of a common function of the World Council, while assuring democratic control by the 156 member churches.

The World Council was formed at Amsterdam, The Netherlands, August 23, 1948. The second assembly of the World Council will be held at Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., in 1953.

The committee is vested with authority to act for the World Council between the sittings of the council's assembly every five years.

The chairman of the central committee is the Right Rev. George K. A. Bell, Anglican Bishop of Chichester. He is assisted by Dr. Franklin Clark Fry of New York, president of the United Lutheran Church in America.

Prominent churchmen from the United States arriving today included the Very Rev. Angus Dun, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Washington, D. C.

Scottsboro Case Escapee to Have Hearing July 13

Detroit, July 8 (AP).—A resentful Haywood Patterson classified all Southerners as "yellow" and declared today he will "fight with everything I've got" his return to Alabama to complete a 75-year sentence in the famed Scottsboro case.

The Negro, now 38, was arrested here 11 days ago by Federal Bureau of Investigation agents on charges of fleeing across State lines to avoid imprisonment. He escaped from an Alabama prison farm July 17, 1948, after serving 16 years.

Patterson will have a hearing July 13 before U. S. District Judge Arthur F. Lederle here. He is under $5000 bond posted by the Civil Rights Congress, an organization on the Justice Department's subversive list.

Judge Lederle has insisted he will not permit the Federal charge against Patterson to be used merely for his extradition, and the U. S. District Attorney's office at Montgomery was quoted as saying "It is up to the State to bring him back."

Water Dispute Ended in Berlin

Berlin, July 8 (AP).—Water from the Russian sector of Berlin flowed into pipes in the Western-occupied sectors today after a six-day halt.

The agreement to restore the water supply came the day after talks opened looking to the restoration of normal trade between the Western and Russian zones of Germany.

It also provided for new negotiations on the resumption of power deliveries from the Russian zone to West Berlin which were halted June 31.

The shut-offs followed a row over payment for the services. The East claimed payment was too low.

$319 'End of World' In Holdup in Reverse

Philadelphia, July 8 (AP).—Harry Clavin, a driver-salesman for an ice cream firm, made a delivery today at a candy store.

Ernest Mantz, 25-year-old clerk, offered a $10 bill in payment. Clavin got out a $319 roll of bills to make change.

Clavin told police Mantz took one look at it and cried, "This is the end of the world." Mantz pocketed the roll and headed for the basement.

Police found the money hidden in various places in the basement.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Boom Now Taken for Granted

Sentiment has swung around full circle. If, two or three weeks ago, a group of business men or business analysts got together, the discussion would promptly have centered on the question: How long can the boom last? That's still a pertinent question: But it has been shunted aside by Korea. The business boom now is taken for granted.

Livingston

People are no longer pondering whether demand for automobiles will peter out in the winter. It's assumed that auto makers automatically will sell what they produce. (That's a boon, incidentally, to the independent producers, such as Kaiser-Frazer, Packard, and others. They thrive best in a seller's market.

Nor are people concerned any more about the construction industry. As noted here last week, the war has speeded up work on industrial, commercial, and residential projects. The idea is to beat any stop-construction orders. Real estate salesmen showing new dwellings have a new argument: Buy now, in case there's a building freeze.

Later on, if defense expenditures pick up, if demand for munitions begins to make a dent in supplies of steel, lumber, and other building materials, the construction industry may be pinched. Delays on the site might send costs soaring—as in 1946 and 1947. Then contractors would hesitate to embark on extensive home construction. But that's not yet. The Korean crisis so far has only increased the use of escalator clauses in construction and other contracts. Builders and manufacturers want protection against rapid price advances.

Hitting the Ceiling

Today's new economic theory is that we can count on six to nine months of full employment, full profits, and full demand. Business is just about hitting the ceiling. Here are three bits of evidence:

1. Steel operations are scheduled to come back from the Fourth of July holiday week to above 100 percent of capacity.

2. For the electric power industry, Christmas has arrived in July. In the week ended July 1, power sales climbed to an all-time high—13 percent ahead of last year—an unseasonal performance. The peak in power demand normally occurs just before December 25 when days are short and when the stores keep open at night. That results in concentrated demand from both domestic and commercial consumers (see chart). Television, which takes more juice than radio, has added to the load.

3. Employment in June rose 1,750,000 to 61,482,000 persons, second highest on record. Unemployment, strangely enough, also rose in June, from 3,057,000 to 3,384,000. That was due entirely to the influx of high school and college graduates to the labor market.

The underlying assumption—both in Washington and Wall Street—is that Russia will sit Korea out. That explains the recovery in the stock market. Many investors and speculators feel they now know the worst. However, the initiative—the power of decision—rests with Joe Stalin, not with Harry Truman. The Kremlin can decide—at its leisure—whether to let the Korean incident remain "the Korean incident."

And it's well to be prepared for higher taxes. For defense outlays are almost certain to go up. Orders to Willys for jeeps and Remington Arms for 30-caliber ammunition are samples of things to come. The excise taxes, which the House voted to reduce, may be left alone. For two reasons: Excise taxes, during a period of shortages, are deflationary. They penalize luxury buyers. That was why they were imposed in the first place in World War II.

Geography Boom

Pittsburgh is by no means as confident about "peace" as Wall Street. Steel scrap prices tumbled again. The reasoning: In the event of a major war, ceilings would be imposed on scrap right off. Therefore, dealers unloaded. At the same time, however, Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corp., a leader in stainless steel, followed U. S. Steel in boosting stainless prices 3.5 percent to 7.4 percent.

The only certainty, so far, is that Americans are becoming increasingly conscious of the wide world they live in. Sales of maps of Korea and the Far East have soared about 300 percent, according to Rand & McNally. GIs, who fought in Japan, Europe, North Africa, and elsewhere, are conscious of foreign places that the doughboys of World War I, whose activities were confined mainly to Europe, never even heard of. And school curricula, to keep students abreast of current headlines, must be expanded to explain the whys and wherefores of diplomatic and miliary urgencies.

Kellex Corp. Is Purchased By Vitro Firm

By S. Oliver Goodman

The Kellex Corp., which operates a large research laboratory in nearby Silver Spring, has been sold to the Vitro Manufacturing Co., it was announced here yesterday.

Designer of the new Uranium-235 plant at Oak Ridge, Tenn., the Kellex firm of New York is currently working under contracts with the Atomic Energy Commission and the Armed Services.

The Maryland plant at 960 Wayne ave. is responsible for the engineering of guided missiles and secret tasks in connection with underwater warfare. It is under the direction of Dr. G. R. Tatum and Woodman Perine and has about 150 employes in a building containing 22,000 square feet.

(Sotto voce: Several hundred bowlers' hearts were broken in April, 1949, when the Wayne ave. structure housing bowling alleys was taken over by Kellex.)

Dr. Tatum said yesterday no policy or administrative changes are anticipated at the Silver Spring plant.

The Vitro firm is a chemical refiner and manufacturer for industry and the Atomic Energy Commission. Among newly elected officers of Kellex are Albert L. Baker, president, and William H. Denne jr., vice president and general manager. Both formerly held executive posts with Kellex, which before its sale was a subsidiary of the M. W. Kellogg Co., a unit of the Pullman company.

ARLINGTON BONDS: Up for award on July 13 is a $2,250,000 school bond issue of Arlington County, Va. Five banking groups are preparing to enter bids, it was learned yesterday. Dated July 1, 1950, the bonds will mature serially from July 1, 1951, through July 1, 1974. This offering will represent the second and final installment of a school bond issue for $4,750,000 authorized by voters at the general election of November 2, 1948.

ON MISSION: Daniel W. Bell, president of the American Security & Trust Co., left Washington by plane Friday on a Government assignment. Bell was named by President Truman recently to head an American economic mission to the Philippine Republic. The mission will survey the economic situation there, recommend measures of self-help and also suggest ways the United States might be helpful. Assisting as deputy chief of the mission is Maj. Gen. Richard J. Marshall, president of the Virginia Military Institute.

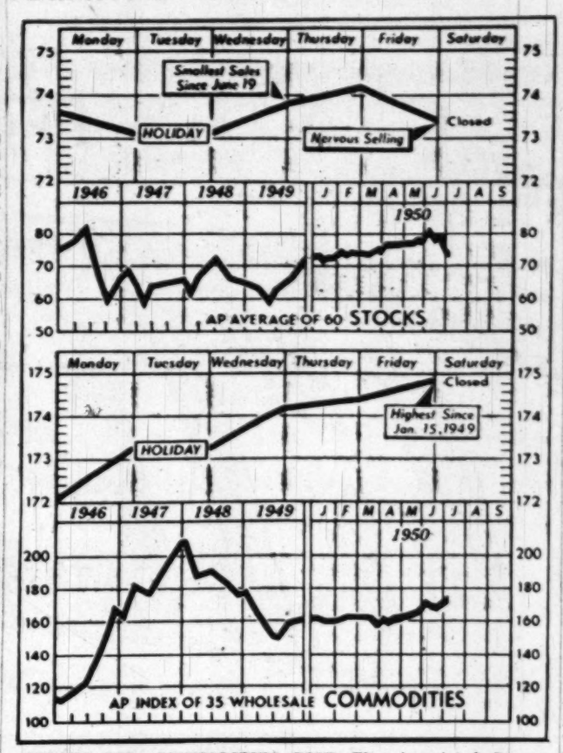
SLIGHT DIP: June sales of Peoples Drug Stores Inc. totaled $3,727,931, a dip of 1 per cent under the $3,766,095 in same 1949 period. Six-month sales aggregated $22,270,985, off 1.4 per cent from the $22,582,384 a year ago. Treasurer W. H. Churchill pointed out that the chain operated 141 stores in June, against 142 last year.

WHO'S WHO TODAY: Elmer F. Hinner has been appointed general manager of Hercules Powder Co.'s Virginia cellulose department, succeeding the late Lloyd Kitchel . . . Miss Miriam Follmer has been promoted to buyer of furniture, fabrics and accessories for W. & J. Sloane in Washington . . . James W. Birkenstock has been named executive assistant at International Business Machine Corp.'s world headquarters in New York . . . R. J. Doherty has been made group manager of seven retail stores in the Philadelphia area of Sears, Roebuck & Co. . . . Edward B. Smoot has been appointed resident manager of Aetna Insurance Group in charge of operations in Virginia.

BONDS OFF: United States Treasury bonds were lower Friday in over-the-counter trading. This was principally the effect of the Federal Reserve System's announcement that it sold some 89 million dollars worth of bonds in the open market from its own portfolio in the week ended Wednesday. This was the highest for any week in two months.

ODD LOTS: The Division of Business Studies, of the American University, is registering students for the second half summer session courses which begin July 31 under the supervision of Prof. Nathan A. Bailey. . . . The Washington unit of the National Association of Cost Accountants will hold its annual baseball game party the evening of July 21 at Griffith Stadium. . . . B. F. Goodrich Co. announced yesterday the election of Paul Codman Cabot of Brookline, Mass. as a director. He is president of the State Street Investment Corp.

Market Trends at a Glance



STOCKS DIP, COMMODITIES RISE—The Associated Press average of 60 stocks declined the past week from 73.6 at the close of the preceding week to 73.4 as shown in the above chart. Paced by the livestock component, the commodity index showed the largest weekly rise since November 28, 1947, closing the week at 174.9, the highest figure since January 15, 1949. A week previously the index stood at 172.1

Worry Caused by 'Gas' Stocks Vanishes as Season Advances

Houston, July 8 (AP).—Summer motorists have wiped out a record gasoline stock peak that caused worry three months ago.

Gasoline storage last week totaled 114,139,000 barrels, only 139,000 above the same period last year.

This means consumer demand, since April 1, has reduced stocks by 21,447,000 barrels while also burning the approximately 18 million barrels refineries have turned out each week since then.

On April 1 storage reached 135,586,000 barrels, a record high.

There was fear the market would be flooded. Price wars were predicted.

Demand now is estimated 10 percent greater than last summer.

There is no worry now about the possibility of a surplus being on hand two months from now when the vacation season ends.

There is some fear a severe 1950-51 winter will find the industry facing tough supply problems if immediate steps are not taken to increase heating fuel stocks.

Seasonal problems have plagued the oil industry ever since heavy postwar demand and a severe winter combined to tax output and supply to capacity in 1947.

Despite these problems, however, the industry, immediately upon outbreak of the Korean War, advised Washington officials it is prepared to meet any and all foreseeable military emergencies."

Rally in Stocks Upset by Late Selling Wave

New York, July 8 (AP).—A quiet rally in the stock market blew up in smoke late this week.

In the last couple of hours of trading on Friday nervous selling—which had been almost absent during the week—flared up and the labored gains of 2½ days were all but wiped out.

The Friday selling was based largely on rumors, rumors which were given a degree of factual backing when it was announced as the market closed that the President had authorized the use of the draft.

During the week, though, investors and speculators held their operations to a sedate pace. Korea, and the many implications of our intervention in the fighting there, dominated trading strategy only to the extent that caution keynoted dealings.

There was little market response to the likelihood that our participation in the Korean war might drag out for months or to the day-to-day flow of battle fortunes.

On average the week's dealings left the market little changed from Saturday a week ago. The price level curved downward Monday, up on Wednesday (after the Fourth of July recess) and Thursday, and down on Friday.

Opinion in Wall street seemed to be shaping up into two distinct groups: One took the view that our aid to the Koreans was not the first step toward World War III. This theory was based on a combination of wishful thinking and the fact that thus far Russia had gone no further than to verbally denounce our behavior in the Far East.

The other camp took the stand that our sweeping change of Far Eastern policy sooner or later will lead us into open conflict with the Soviets. The only difference in opinion here was of the timing—does Russia want war now or later?

Based on the market's performance both views leaned to the academic side. In other words, the general tendency was to sit back and wait to see what happens next.

Business news which might normally affect the market was relegated to the background.

Woodward Iron Net

Birmingham, July 8 (AP).—Woodward Iron Co. today reported net profit in six months ended June 30 was $2,541,279, equal to $3.60 a share, compared with $2,753,397, or $3.90 a share, in the first six months of 1949.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, July 8 (AP).—With old crop corn and new crop soybean contracts setting new seasonal peaks, grains ended higher on the Board of Trade today.

It was an active market with plenty of selling orders thrown into the pits as prices advanced. That kept gains in check and final prices, with the exception of soybeans, were mostly only fractionally higher.

Wheat ended ⅝-1⅛ higher, corn ⅛ lower to ⅜ higher, oats ¼-½ higher, rye ¼ lower to ¼ higher, soybeans 3¾-6¼ higher and lard 15 to 30 cents a hundred pounds higher.

Communists Repulsed on New Propaganda Front

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

THE red arrows that stabbed southward on the war maps of Korea last week did not tell the whole story.

While Communist tanks were pushing far below the thirty-eighth parallel, with little to stop them, another kind of Communist attack was meeting determined resistance around the world.

This was the strange and fantastic propaganda attack of the Communists everywhere, aimed at making Russia look peaceful and at picturing the United States as the aggressor.

Every Communist radio shouted the same story; every Communist newspaper filled columns with it; every Communist government, Soviet or satellite, ordered "spontaneous" meetings of workers to protest against American warmongering and imperialism in Asia.

Nothing so shrill and abusive has been heard on the world's air waves since Hitler screamed his denunciations of the Czechs and the Poles as the instigators of war.

Undoubtedly the story was being believed —in North Korea, where the Communists fought and organized like fanatics, and among the Communists of China, eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

Yet, judging from first reports from all over the world, the campaign has been a miserable failure for the Communists outside the countries they control. America's record and America's actions have been antidotes to the Communist poison.

Even Pacifists Applaud

A DRAMATIC instance came from Geneva, where non-Communist labor leaders were attending a meeting of the International Labor Organization at the very moment President Truman ordered the use of American forces in Korea.

By instinct, many of these leaders, like Leon Jouhaux of France, had been pacifist and inclined, in past years, to look tolerantly on the Soviet Union. But when news of the Korean invasion came, and then the news of the American and United Nations response, the American delegates at Geneva became heroes, and the European labor leaders were jubilant at what the United States had done.

Outside the Communist countries and the Communist parties, there have been only two areas where the press and public have failed to applaud the stand on Korea.

One of these is the Arab Middle East, notably in Egypt and Iraq, where resentments left over from the Palestine war led the governments to refuse their support of the U. N. The other "soft spot" so far has been Indonesia, where articulate opinion approved the government's policy of neutrality.

Top-Heavy in Britain

EVERYWHERE else the U. N. appears to have had overwhelming backing from the press and public, with only a few dissenters making their voices heard. In Britain, a Gallup Poll showed the other day that 68 percent approved President Truman's use of force in Korea, 15 percent disapproved and 17 percent were undecided.

In Sweden, almost under the Soviet guns on the Baltic, the government supported the U. N., and the non-Communist press approved with only one or two exceptions. In Turkey, on the other side of the Soviet giant, a privately financed movement gained ground to send 500 volunteers to help the U. N. forces in Korea.

In France and Italy, with Communist parties that are still large and powerful, some non-Communist commentators were nervous at the thought that America might divert its strength from Europe to the Far East. But so far as one could tell from press comments, there was almost universal relief at the sight of the United States and the U. N. fighting aggression instead of wringing their hands about it.

The bravest of all the responses came from India, where the press of Asia's greatest free nation showed, in general, that it understood the true issues in Korea. Even the leader of the Socialist Party, normally suspicious of the United States, applauded Prime Minister Nehru's decision to support the U. N. stand.

All of these reports, and dozens of others like them, brought enormous satisfaction to American officials last week. For if world opinion stays firm and resolute on the Korean issue, it may yet give communism the most smashing defeat it has suffered since the end of the war.

John Foster Dulles, just back from the Far East, told a Senate subcommittee the other day that the success or failure of the Soviet propaganda drive might make the difference between war or peace "in the next few months."

He argued that the Russians would be in a position to launch a world war if they could get the world to believe their story of American "aggression."

"Korea was a case of open, unprovoked aggression," Dulles told the Senators. "There never was a case in history of a more open, outrageous attack. Yet all over the world Soviet propaganda is spreading the story that we started it.

"If they can get away with that kind of thing in Korea, then I believe our peace is in danger, too; because then it will be demonstrated that they can start open war and still be pictured as a peace-loving country."

Symbol of 'Aggression'

DULLES was speaking not only with personal knowledge of Soviet tactics, gained in many international conferences, but also with personal feeling. For the Communists have made him one of the symbols of the American "aggression" which they are now proclaiming throughout the world.

The picture of Dulles in a black suit and black hat, inspecting a war map at the Korean thirty-eighth parallel a couple of weeks ago, has been reproduced in Pravda and described on every Communist radio as proof that the Americans pushed the South Koreans into war.

The Communists have always held the conspiratorial theory of history. They have always peopled the outer world with devils and deep-dyed villains. Nothing ever happens in the Communist mythology about the capitalist world; it is always fomented, instigated or plotted by sinister individuals or forces.

Among the favorite evil-doers today are not only Dulles but the "Wall Street bankers," who control the "militarists," who control the officeholders like Harry Truman, and who, of course, pull the strings for the poor, deluded voters and their representatives.

Twirl the short-wave dials, and pick up snatches of any English-language broadcast from any Communist transmitter, and you will hear the same story.

The tale is that Syngman Rhee and his "traitor gang," puppets of the American militarists, have long been itching to get their hands on North Korea. Things were going badly for Rhee and his American masters.

The decision to go to war was taken (so the story goes) when General Bradley, Secretary Johnson and Dulles met General MacArthur in Tokyo. The signal for war was given when Dulles visited Korea and had his picture taken on the thirty-eighth parallel. But the aggression did not go as planned; the brave People's Democratic army of the North resisted, and now the wicked imperialists have been put to flight.

With minor embroideries, the same story comes from Moscow, from Warsaw, from Peking, from Ho Chi Minh's radio in far-off Indo-China.

Everything in this version of history is designed to show that American "aggres-

Home Front Defeats 'Panic' Senate

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

THE stampede to adjourn or recess Congress in a few weeks, despite the Korean crisis, stems from Senate election jitters, amounting in some cases to mild panic.

It was touched off by defeat in State primaries of the third Senator in a row, and threatened defeat of a fourth and a fifth.

Usually the House, where each of the 436 members must stand for reelection, sets the adjournment pace. The Senate, with only a third of its membership having any election stake, patronizingly goes along with the rush, but always with a few hours more talk.

This time the Senate needed no House prodding. Although some of the old-timers think it's a mistake, Senators at the reins in both parties are straining to clear out at least by mid-August.

What finally sparkled the adjournment gallop was Representative Mike Monroney's impressive margin over veteran Senator Elmer Thomas in the Okalhoma primaries, still awaiting a runoff.

Earlier, these Senators had been bowled over, one, two, three: Senator Claude Pepper (D., Fla.), by Representative George A. Smathers; Senator Gurney (R., S. Dak.), by Representative Francis Case; and Senator Frank P. Graham (D., N. C.), by Willis Smith. Still another, Olin D. Johnston, could fall by the wayside in Tuesday's South Carolina primaries.

With each defeat, Senators up against stiff competition put on more heat for adjournment.

"You can't win these contests long-distance," one protested. "You've got to get back on home grounds, and stay there. Every Senate upset this year proves that."

The Senate Democratic Policy Committee, which calls Senate signals, finally capitulated to their pleas after Oklahoma returns showed Thomas trailing. Adjournment was made strictly contingent on "war developments," however.

Senate Republican leaders, just as worried by the trend against Senate incumbents, tacitly joined the drive.

A lone voice raised in the Senate next day planted doubts that may grow as the Korean conflict progresses. Oregon's Wayne Morse told colleagues the wise thing to do is remain in Washington, if only on a stand-by basis.

Congress may yet decide that the better part of election-year valor is to stick to its post.

Effect of the 'War'

MAJOR LEAGUE politicians in both parties are revising "first guesses" that the Korean conflict will necessarily give Democratic candidates the edge in the fall election.

Much will depend, they say, on whether this continues to be a "sideline war."

If it does, it may mean "business as usual" and, inevitably, "politics as usual." Right or wrong, present congressional adjournment plans are based on that assumption.

Domestic issues, initially blacked out by the President's dramatic decision, would still be controlling in many a close congressional race.

Whether or not Korean hostilities are "localized," many politicians on both sides of the aisle believe the war issue is too dangerous to play with, and will be used by any candidate at his own risk.

Just now, it seems to favor the party in power, but it can flare back if the public believes mistakes have been made in preparation for and conduct of the Korean campaign.

Cold-blooded analyses of the political impact of the Far Eastern move, made separately by Democratic and Republican Party strategists, substantially coincided on these points:

1. That President Truman's decision had the solid backing of the country and the showdown move boosted his own stock immeasurably.

2. But the President isn't a candidate in this election and may have to stay pretty much above the political battle to retain essential national unity. This could put a

Korea Will Be a Months-Long Job

By Fletcher Pratt

Fletcher Pratt is a well known writer on military and naval affairs and is the author of many books on the American armed forces and on military and naval theory. Recent ones include "Eleven Generals," "The Marines' War," "Fleet Against Japan" and "A Short History of the Army and Navy."

THE INITIAL contacts of American troops with the North Koreans have given some indication of the nature of the struggle just beginning there and of the quantity of the commitment this country will have to assume if the Communist advance is to be beaten back.

It looks like a far more serious commitment than was foreseen when the happiness boys around General MacArthur's headquarters allowed their opinion, that a single division would be enough, to reach the press.

Not altogether unreasonably, they based their opinion upon the behavior of the South Koreans in action. As soon as these latter began to get hit a bit, they took to their heels. There just isn't any South Korean army any more.

It hasn't worked out the same way with the North Koreans. In the earlier contacts they stood up like veteran soldiers, and even when tanks were knocked out their crews refused to come out and surrender. Propaganda from the Red side will undoubtedly claim that this is because of the superior courage and idealism produced by fighting to make the world comfortable for Joe Stalin. But the fact is that it only represents training, experience and equipment.

All the same, it is unfortunate that the North Koreans should have been allowed to gain the confidence produced by the fact that their heavy tanks have proved generally capable of standing up to American artillery fire. No real and decisive breakdown of their morale—the point that will ultimately decide the issue—can now be expected until it is demonstrated that we have weapons which render those tanks impotent.

There may be such weapons back in the United States, but they aren't at the front, and the only thing within reach that appears capable of doing the job is heavy artillery, the 155s. A United States infantry division normally has 18 such weapons, and if the North Koreans have, as indicated, between 100 and 150 tanks, this would appear to indicate that we shall need somewhere between three and six full-strength infantry divisions before the mess can be cleaned up.

There are only four divisions in Japan now, including the one operating in Korea. The Chinese Nationalists have offered troops, but the acceptance of such help would be politically dangerous, as it would be an invitation for the Chinese Communists to put in their very much larger forces in support of the North Koreans. Whether the Australians will send troops is uncertain. It looks as though American troops will have to be shipped across the Pacific from the West Coast.

Other indications point in the same direction. The North Koreans seem to have around 75,000 men now in the invasion, and all reports indicate that they have another 25,000 trained reserves in the background. The country is a good one for defense and our people there now can probably hold a line of some kind, which is the first necessity. But the same suitability of the terrain for defense is likely to hold up any advance against the North Koreans unless it is made in overwhelming force and accompanied by such supporting arms as tanks and tactical air.

There is the possibility that the North Korean advance will be slowed and their operations much hampered by supply problems as American planes work over their back areas. But, ultimately effective though air attacks on supply dumps and rear areas may prove, such operations produce their effects rather slowly. The results so far have been generally disappointing.

This is not the fault of the Air Force; it is due to the type of plane available. The B-29s carry a big load of bombs, but they are mostly suitable for working over targets like factories and cities which occupy large areas. There are few large area targets in North Korea.

What is needed there is planes capable of pin-pointing small targets and giving close support. Those planes are lacking, and the jet-fighters, with which the American forces have been trying to supply the lack, are pretty unsuitable for the job, both because of their limited range from base and because they move past a ground target so rapidly that it is estimated an F-80 can get off only nine shots during a dive.

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

An American anti-aircraft gun crew "covers" transports using the Suwon airfield in the early stages of the Communist invasion. What the Americans need now, says Fletcher Pratt, is 155s, and dozens of them

It is possible, then, that when the heavy equipment really begins to get into action, the North Koreans will collapse as the South Koreans have done. But the heavy equipment must get there first, and since so much of it is at such a distance, the current indication is that the clearing up of the Korean mess will be a matter counted in months rather than weeks.

U. S. Role in Turk 'Revolution' an Answer to Reds

By Albert Coolidge

The author, writing under an Anglicized byline which is a phonetic approximation of his Turkish name, is a Turkish newspaperman who accompanied Celal Bayar on many campaign tours.

ANKARA (NYHT).—When Mustafa Kemal Ataturk, founder and first president of the modern Turkish Republic, died in 1938, his premier, Celal Bayar, could have maneuvered himself into the presidency.

As next-ranking leader of Ataturk's Republican People's Party, which held the country in a firm, single-party rule, Bayar was heir apparent. But, being a civilian, he did not enjoy the support of the army. So, to keep peace in Turkey, he relinquished the power of state to former soldier, former Premier Ismet Inonu.

Now Inonu has added "former president" to his list of emeritus titles. He has vacated the Pink House, the Turkish White House, and Bayar has moved in. For in the recent general elections, the first free and fair polls Turkey has ever seen, the 67-year-old financier was able to win with ballots what he could have won only with bullets 12 years ago.

Something to Cheer

BAYAR'S victory at the polls was the climax of a bloodless revolution he has led since he broke with the Republican Party in 1945 to organize the new Democratic Party. The elections themselves marked a postwar changeover for Turkey from a one-party dictatorship to a working democracy.

In an era when the trend seems to be in the opposite direction, this has given democratic nations something to cheer about. It has also given the lie to Communist charges that the Truman Doctrine was instituted by the United States only to keep incumbent reactionary regimes in power.

It is true that Truman Doctrine aid did play an important part in the revolution, but not in a way that could be considered American meddling in Turkish internal affairs. What American arms and dollars did was to strengthen Turkey against foreign pressure, particularly from her Soviet neighbor to the north, and to stabilize to some extent her economic situation. This left Inonu without any crises, which dictatorships need to keep themselves in power, and created an atmosphere favorable to democracy.

Democracy, of course, had been Ataturk's great goal. He had intended his one-party rule only as a transition during which Turks who had known only the absolutism of the sultans could learn how to operate a democratic state. "I am a dictator," he once declared, "but my mission is to dictate democracy and to prevent future dictators."

Familiar Terror Weapons

OPPOSITION to Inonu developed because many Turks felt that he had lost sight of Ataturk's democratic aims. Republican Party leaders seemed intent only on keeping the reins of government in their own hands. The dictatorship was a mild one, when contrasted to the deadly efficiency of the Nazi, Fascist and Communist single-party states, but it wielded many of the familiar terror weapons. There were police spies and iron press censorship.

After World War II, however, Inonu, who was called "the deaf genius of diplomacy" by Lord Curzon, could no longer turn his deaf ear to rising grumbling at home and polite criticism from Western diplomats. In 1945 he made a gesture toward democracy by permitting his one-party National Assembly to pass laws legalizing the formation of other political parties and liberalizing somewhat the curbs on elections and the press.

It was then that Bayar bolted the Republican Party, together with Adnan Menderes, Fuad Koprulu and Refik Koraltan, who are now the new government's premier, foreign minister and president of the National Assembly. The general elections of July, 1946, were only nominally free. The dictatorship held its majority, and the Democrats won only a few seats in the Assembly. But from that point, Bayar expanded the democratic beachhead on three fronts.

First, he joined forces with the press to mobilize public opinion to force Inonu into further reforms. Then, although there were only 65 Democratic members in the 468-seat, single-house parliament, they succeeded in pushing through a really democratic election law. Reluctantly, Inonu had to order members of the executive branch of the government to remain neutral in the struggle between the parties.

Second, despite his years, Bayar toured the most distant provinces of Asia Minor to exhort the peasants, who instinctively fear government officials, not to be intimidated by the Republican Party's administration.

Third, he exerted a moderating influence on extremists in the Democratic Party. Undercover Communist agitators infiltrated both the Democrats and the Nation Party, composed of Moslem nationalists, with the intention of stirring fanatics to a really bloody rebellion. But Bayar frustrated them with his formula for bloodless revolution.

First Civilian President

THUS Bayar became Turkey's third president, and a unique one in two respects—he is the first civilian to hold that office and the first to be "duly elected."

His path to the Pink House is a Turkish Horatio Alger story.

Born the son of a teacher in the village of Umurbey in northwest Turkey, he started out as a clerk in the Izmir branch of the German Orient Bank and rose quickly to a responsible position.

When liberal "Young Turkish" groups were organized to overthrow the "Red Sultan" Abdul-Hamid II in 1906, Bayar helped form the Izmir group. Later, when these groups were transformed into local branches of the Union and Progress Party, which acquired power during the constitutional-monarchy period following the Red Sultan's reign, he became secretary of the Izmir branch. During this hectic dual life as a bank executive and a political organizer, he got training which served him well later on.

When Turkey was defeated in World War I and Greek troops occupied the Izmir region, Bayar donned the robes of a Moslem priest, grew a long beard, and as "Ghalib Hodja" set out to organize guerilla bands against the Greeks. A few months later he joined Ataturk, who had then rallied the various resistance groups under the banner of a provisional government in Ankara.

THERE, Bayar became a member of the provisional Assembly and a financial adviser of the government. Ataturk entrusted him with the mission of establishing a national Turkish bank which would both finance the government and get economic and industrial development of the country started.

His success in establishing and promoting the Is Bankasi, which is still the leading bank in Turkey, took him into the cabinet of Ismet Inonu, who was then the premier. Although Inonu never liked him and he never trusted Inonu, Ataturk's insistence kept him as a minister of economics in almost every Inonu cabinet up to 1937. In that year, Ataturk finally ousted Inonu and named Bayar as premier.

Ataturk is reported to have told his newly named premier: "I can entrust Turkey to you, and I can now die without worries."

In spite of close association with Ataturk, who lived a very unconventional life, Bayar has always been a family man. But in the last four years he has had little chance to enjoy the company of his intellectual wife, daughter and son and four grandchildren. Those years were a greatly extended version of an American presidential candidate's campaign tour, minus the special train, minus the splendid highways and minus the comfort of modern hotels.

Once, commenting on these years, he said: "One does not understand one's country and one's people when he remains glued to the premier's seat . . . I know my people and my country much better than I did four years ago . . ."

Eloquent and Witty

IN HIS political chess match with the dictator, Bayar displayed three attributes Inonu lacked:

He was an eloquent extemporaneous speaker. Three years ago he made just such a speech, five hours long, at Sivas and the government had to issue a long communique to reply paragraph-by-paragraph.

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Furthermore, Bayar did not bear grudges and seemed to know the secret of remaining calm in emergencies.

Lastly, he had a sense of humor. During a political tour in Anatolia, while his motor caravan stopped for lunch, Bayar lay on the grass to catch a quick nap. An aide protested that he might catch cold on the ground. Bayar raised his head and said: "Don't you think it is high time that I get used to staying close to earth? Then it will not seem so unfamiliar to me when I eventually get into it for good!"

Another incident that illustrates his acid sense of humor took place a couple of years after his resignation as premier. Bayar discovered that he was being shadowed by one of the government's agents. He recognized the agent, with his hat drawn down to his ears, as a man who had been his personal bodyguard when he was premier.

Bayar stopped and called the man by name. The agent, unable to ignore the call of his one-time boss, came up hesitatingly. Bayar took off his coat and handed it to his trailer. "As long as you are following me," he said, "you might as well carry my coat home."

It Cost Him Weight

BAYAR'S biting humor and steady nerves did not fail him through the four-year campaign. He once remarked: "We are winning democracy, but I am losing weight." He is going to need humor and nerve for the job ahead. Turkey still has her troubles—particularly economic ones. The Democrats are expected to meet them with strong measures, not unlike England's austerity.

But Bayar seems ready to do his part, even if it means losing more weight. He has got rid of 10 of the 13 presidential automobiles Inonu had. When he drove to his inauguration, he rode in a jeep without the motorcycle escort that had been customary. And the presidential yacht, the Savarona, is up for sale.

Abdullah is Feudal Titan Of Middle East Politics

By Fred J. Zusy
Associated Press Reporter

AMMAN, JORDAN.—A ragged desert Bedouin climbs the steep road to a palace on a hill overlooking Amman. He strides past sturdy Circassian guards to tell the court chamberlain he wishes to see King Abdullah.

It is 6 a. m. The king is starting his audiences for the day. The Bedouin stalks into the royal chambers. Bedouin and king embrace, kissing on the cheek in the traditional Bedouin fashion. They have never met before, but by the desert code any subject can have audience with his ruler.

The same Abdullah goes to London and dines with the king and queen of England, conversing with ease—through an interpreter—on literature, politics, philosophy.

Abdullah wears a dagger in his belt, but he can't draw it. It's soldered in its sheath. Too often in the past, he's come close to knifing a subject when his mercurial temper was aroused.

A devout man—he claims direct descent from Mohammed, prophet of Islam—Abdullah bows to Mecca in his five-times-a-day prayers, the first around sunrise. Every Friday he prays at the mosque.

Led Arab Armies

WITH much fanfare, he led a group of Arab armies in the ill-fated 1948 war "to push the Jews into the sea." Other Arab leaders accused him, however, of conducting secret negotiations with the Jews during the fighting. They said Abdullah's famed Arab Legion pulled its punches by orders of the British, who control it.

King Abdullah is the most controversial figure in the Arab world. He has come close to breaking up the Arab League, the regional organization of seven Arab states. King Farouk of Egypt and King Ibn Saud of Saudi Arabia frankly detest him.

Yet Abdullah sometimes is hailed as the most stabilizing factor in the chaotic, strategic, oil-rich Middle East. American and British diplomats say he is the only Arab leader who's had the common sense to realize that Israel is in the Middle East to stay. He is willing to talk permanent peace. The other Arabs won't.

The colorful Abdullah reigns over a territory of less than 40,000 square miles, chiefly desert. Boundaries are vague.

Maj. Gen. John Bagot Glubb (Glubb Pasha), the British officer who heads Abdullah's Arab legion and, behind the scenes, wields great influence, once described the nation as "wild and unwanted territory." An American author termed it "a vagrant kingdom without visible means of support."

Jordan Recently Enlarged

JORDAN recently was enlarged through annexation of eastern Palestine, including the biblical cities of old walled Jerusalem, Jericho and Bethlehem. This more than doubled Abdullah's subjects. They now number more than a million, including more than 500,000 Palestine refugees whose homes and farms are held by Israel. Most refugees are penniless.

Abdullah was born in Mecca, February 26, 1882. He is the son of the late Sharif Hussein, then ruler of the territory including Mecca and Medina, holy cities of Islam.

Hussein and his family were called to Istanbul by the Turks in 1893 because of Turkish suspicions of Hussein's intentions toward his satrapy.

The family lived in Turkey more than 15 years. Abdullah, a bright young man, received a Turkish education. He even became a member of the Turkish Parliament.

At the end of their enforced exile, Hussein and his sons returned to Mecca. They played a big part in the Arab nationalist movement before the first war. Abdullah was emissary and foreign minister for his father in missions which resulted in the McMahon correspondence.

Letters Misinterpreted

THESE letters from Sir Henry McMahon, representing Britain, were interpreted by the Arabs as a promise that all of Palestine, including what now is Israel, would go to the Arabs. The Balfour declaration, which followed later, contradicted this.

Abdullah and his brother, Faisal, joined Lawrence of Arabia in the World War I anti-Turk "revolt in the desert." After the war, the British made Faisal King of Syria in partial fulfillment of their pledges.

The French kicked out Faisal in 1920. Abdullah raised an army and proceeded from Mecca toward Damascus, determined to seek revenge. He got as far as Amman.

Winston Churchill, then colonial secretary, was in Jerusalem at the time. Churchill persuaded Abdullah to give up his aggressive intentions against the French and become ruler of a new territory carved out of Palestine and called Trans-Jordan. Churchill promised British protection and financial aid.

This protection and help has continued to this day. Other Arab rulers say, with some foundation in fact, it has made Abdullah a British puppet. The British have complete control over the Arab Legion. They meet a good half of Jordan's annual budget of 15 million dollars.

Faisal, with British help, later became King of Iraq. His grandson, also named Faisal, is now Iraq's boy King. Iraq has been and remains Abdullah's best Arab friend.

Defeated by Ibn Saud

ABDULLAH twice was soundly defeated by Ibn Saud in desert battles. The first time was 1919, after Abdullah's father proclaimed himself "King of the Arabs." The second was in 1925, when Ibn Saud drove Hussein from Mecca and the Hejaz, adding that territory to his own kingdom. As the only living son of Hussein, Abdullah still lays claim to the Hejaz. The feud between Abdullah and Ibn Saud is bitter—the "great hate" of the Middle East.

When Abdullah came to Amman, that prebiblical city was a primitive village. In the last quarter century it has grown into a capital of more than 100,000. There are telephones, electric lights and streets crowded with western motor cars.

But the autos sometimes have to fight with donkeys and camels for right-of-way. Bedouins from the desert still come in carrying baby gazelles for sale in their arms.

Abdullah's palace overlooks an ancient Roman amphitheater. Palestine refugees live in caves dug into the slope leading to the palace. On the same site, Abdullah held court in a tent before the present, elaborately-furnished stone structure was erected.

Abdullah and his guests dine western style with fine linen and silver. Most afternoons he retires to his garden and sits, Bedouin-fashion on a rug, sipping tea and reciting Arabic poetry with his guests. He is considered a master of classical Arabic.

A Royal Banquet

OCCASIONALLY he entertains at a Bedouin banquet in a tent camp erected behind the palace. This may feature a camel, roasted whole, stuffed with a sheep, also roasted whole. The sheep is stuffed with chickens and the chickens with hard-boiled eggs. Large mounds of rice surrounded the whole dish, which is on a great metal tray.

Despite his age, Abdullah is still vigorous. He maintains a fine stable of Arab horses. He has the reputation of being a crack shot. His favorite pastime is chess. Those who have played with him say he is expert and generally wins, sometimes exercising royal prerogatives to do so.

Abdullah is dignified but friendly with visitors. Newsmen usually get a cordial welcome. The King likes to see his name and picture in print. He follows the Arabic press closely and may telephone an editor to praise or reprimand him for some story.

Despite a nominal constitution and parliament, Abdullah is still a feudal monarch in most respects. Recently he ordered a number of demonstrators arrested and marched some 70 miles under a hot sun to Amman. One man died. A newspaper editor, related to the dead man, was jailed for writing about it.

Abdullah has called journalists to the palace and warned them he would "smash their heads in" if they didn't toe the line. He maintains a severe censorship on outgoing news.

Abdullah's fixed dream for years has been achievement of the Arab unity his father failed to achieve after the first war. This would mean uniting Jordan with Iraq, Syria and Lebanon. Annexation of Eastern Palestine was the first step.

Abdullah has three wives. The Moslem religion permits up to four. The latest, a black Bedouin woman who was once a palace servant, he married in the '30s. Around Amman, she is called the "black market queen" for alleged dealings in smuggled goods.

Amman gossip has it that she supplies the King with money. Abdullah himself is a poor man. He has some holdings of land, but only a small income.

Prince Tallal, 37, is heir to the throne. He is the oldest son.

Bathtub Was Worse Than Balcony

By H. W. Caygill

ALL that hammering and banging around the White House has nothing in particular to do with Washington's current Sesquicentennial festivities. But that clatter is a salute of some sort marking the centennial of the White House's first bathtub.

Congressional consternation, editorial enmity and caustic cartooning over the acquisition of that tub 100 years back quite equaled that which greeted the fabrication of the first White House balcony not too many months back.

President Truman wanted a better facility for sun-bathing; President Millard Fillmore, a better instrument for water-bathing. Both Presidents knew — and got — what they wanted.

President Truman's determined desires for a sun-porch met with fairly prompt acquiescence. After all, a balcony of one sort or another had long been an appurtenance to just about any palatial American home or mansion other than the White House.

But in 1850, a bathtub was not only unique; it was revolutionary. To many minds, the medical by no means excluded, it was positively unsanitary.

Public Approval Centuries Late

LEGEND has it that the bathtub designed solely for bodily immersion—as distinct from any old tub used concurrently or consecutively to wash dishes, feet, laundry, hands, dogs and bodies—was invented by the Greek mathematician, Archimedes, while still a young boy from old Syracuse.

But the Sicilian's blueprint for a man-size, one-person tub, drawn about 250-240 B. C., did not for many a century meet with public approbation. True, the Romans did go in for baths on a lavish scale, but in the main these were bizarre public and private bathing establishments on the order of present Turkish baths.

An honest-to-goodness bathtub—one with a dark ring around the interior—was a bathing device of another color when the thirteenth President ordered one delivered to his house on Pennsylvania ave.

As early as 1813 there had been improvised in the White House a so-called bathroom but this cubicle had no tub, no running water. Andrew Jackson succeeded in wangling for the Executive Mansion not only running water but hot and cold showers.

However, until the early 1840s Millard Fillmore and those Americans who bathtubbed at all did so in small wooden troughs or tubs of such portability that Mark Twain in his "A Ghost Story" bemoaned that the apparition had run off "with my red blanket and my bathtub."

First American Tub?

IN 1842 an affluent Cincinnati produce dealer installed in his luxurious home what is believed to have been America's first he-man bathtub. A few days before Christmas he held a "bathtub-warming."

Guests were cajoled into trying out the tub. This they found to be a huge mahogany contraption lined with sheet metal, seven feet long, about half that wide, weighing nearly a ton.

Newsmen got wind of the event, headlines blared, editors editorialized. The Cincinnati grain tycoon was tumultuously denounced and derided, with the Cincinnati doctors leading his detractors.

The bathtub hubbub of that area was not confined to Cincinnati. Boston's city fathers decreed bathtub bathing unlawful except on doctors' orders. Virginia's legislators plastered a $30 tax on each bathtub.

Philadelphia's councilmen engaged in acrimonious debate over a by-law to ban bathtubs on sanitary grounds; indeed, the councilmen did succeed in legally prohibiting all bathtubbing for some six months. Anti-bathtub aldermen of numerous other municipalities enacted ordinances imposing well-nigh confiscatory rates for water designed for bathtub use.

Fillmore Loses Election

IN 1849 another bathtub was exhibited in Cleveland. Similar to the Cincinnati contrivance this was a grandiose hardwood affair lined with zinc. President Fillmore liked that tub. Be the anti-bathtub tumult what it might he wanted a tub like that tub; he was adamant. Being a President, Fillmore got for the White House a tub like that tub.

For reasons not confined solely to a predilection for bathtubs Fillmore was not renominated for the Presidency by his Whig Party. As a candidate of the American, or Know Nothing Party, he was soundly defeated in 1856 in a bid for a second presidential term.

But Fillmore had spread the bathtub gospel. While campaigning in New York City for a return to the White House, he did have the satisfaction of finding that Manhattan's more swanky hotels were installing bathtubs—some of them even one to a floor.

How It Feels to Retreat

By Hal Boyle

NEW YORK.—Americans have pulled back in Korea, leaving their own wounded behind. This is what front-line dispatches say.

I can tell you how this makes you feel. It makes you feel like you aren't an American. You don't even feel like a man. It takes away your dignity. You need a shower.

How the wounded feel I don't know. I was lucky. I wasn't hit. But I sure ran like hell in the two major retreats that United States forces made in the Second World War.

It is kind of healthy to run—from a long term point of view—when there isn't much else you can do.

The first time was in the battle which the home folks call Kasserine Gap. Actually, we stood pretty well at Kasserine Gap. The real retreat was a few days before at a place called Faid pass—pronounced Fah-eed—in a continent called Africa and a country named Tunisia.

This is where General George S. Patton's son-in-law was captured, trying to hold one of two hills outside Faid pass.

Just about two years later, General Patton freed his son-in-law by a bold thrust of his Third Army, once renewed, in a push beyond the Rhine. He was in one of several prisoner-of-war camps the Patton Army brought release to in its march through Germany.

But to go back to Tunisia:

Then they blamed the breakthrough on Rommel's Africa Korps on the ground that the American troops, both infantry and armor, were green and inexperienced.

Having come out alive from this retreat myself and having seen men go bravely forward to die there, I cannot accept this canard against their memory. I said then, have said more than once since then, and still say today, this—they were outgunned and outmanned on the ground and in the air, and no troops I have ever seen fought better with less.

Their great country just didn't have what these great men needed—when they needed it. Later the supplies did come, and if I rake over this old sore today it is only because I know how the outmanned, outgunned American outposts in Korea feel.

They feel at the moment, just as the boys felt in Tunisia more than eight years ago, that death is near, mama isn't here—and Uncle Sam only has promised to come. He did come in time, of course, in Tunisia. And he came in power. But naturally, some of the battle pioneers weren't left by then. I remember a few of their faces . . . it was so long ago . . . and the graves registration unit has their serial numbers.

Most of those boys are by now back home, sleeping beside relatives who died of kidney diseases and other local ailments.

I started out to tell about two retreats I had made with American forces. The second one was the Battle of the Bulge, and the same terror wasn't there. Fear can't make you as helpless twice over. You swallow it or go crazy.

What makes me feel sad right now about the American troops being knocked back in Korea—and you don't have to tell me they are outgunned and outnumbered, because, naturally, they don't walk on their heels for fun—is that the stories from the front indicate they are young.

It may be treachery to memory, but somehow I wish they were all veterans, guys who had had it happen to them before.

The hardest thing about war is you hate to hurt beginners. A fellow ought to be old enough to vote once before he dies.

Boobytraps Urged For Sleeping Pills

By Alton L. Blakeslee
Associated Press Science Reporter

NEW YORK. — Sleeping pills should be booby-trapped to prevent suicides or poisoning from taking too many of them, a committee of physicians says.

The boobytrap would be adding an emetic, something that makes you vomit. The amount would be small. It wouldn't affect anyone taking one or two pills.

But the emetic would work if a person took more than a safe number of pills, and he would quickly get rid of the drug.

Rigging sleeping pills this way is one recommendation of the committee on public health of the New York County Medical Society.

The committee is worried about abuses of sleeping pills, or barbiturates. They cause about 1000 deaths a year in this country. Some deaths are deliberate suicides. Others are accidental overdoses.

The sleeping pills are valubale in treating many illnesses, including epilepsy, high blood pressure, irritability and insomnia. But the taking of "large amounts of barbiturates has become one of the commonly used forms of suicide," the committee said.

"The dependence on the artifical aid of a barbiturate hypnotic to induce sleep can lead to habituation addiction and to chronic poisoning.

"Of particular concern to the medical profession is that last year over half of the 325 individuals admitted to (New York) City hospitals for barbiturate poisoning obtained the drugs legally . . . from their own doctors' prescriptions."

Government Controls

UNLESS physicians cooperate to control the abuses, the Government may impose restrictions on sleeping pills similar to those controlling narcotics, the committee warned. It recommended three steps to make such control unnecessary:

1. "The patient should not be given or allowed to accumulate an amount of barbiturate which if taken at one time would be sufficient to cause death. At present a person so inclined does not seem to have any trouble in piling up a reserve of barbiturates which is conveniently available when the suicidal impulse arises. Only enough barbiturate should be prescribed as is reasonably necessary for treatment."

2. The prescriptions could add a small dose of emetic to each pill.

3. "The distribution of barbiturates should be strictly controlled and limited to a physician's prescription."

In many cities, the sleeping pills are bootlegged.

The barbiturate drugs are useful medicines and "their value far outweighs their harmful misuse by a small number of people," the report said. "Legislation that might prevent a small number of emotionally unbalanced persons from misusing barbiturates, but which interferes with proper therapeutic use, would be detrimental to the practice of medicine."

THE cooling system of a new power plant at Portsmouth, N. H., produces more power than the original heat. The plant is a combination mercury and steam system at the Schiller station of the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire.

The first step is to boil mercury and use the vapor the same as steam to drive turbines. There are two of these mercury vapor turbines. After it runs through the turbines, the vapor is still not enough to heat water to make steam for steam turbines. In this second step, the mercury vapor is cooled to liquid for use over and over again.

The two mercury turbines each produce 7500 kilowatts, while the steam turbine which operates on their waste heat produces 25,000 kilowatts.

Time Running Short for Our Strategic 'Big Ditch'

By Luis B. Noli

PANAMA.—The pulse of world commerce, beating daily through the Panama Canal, is being watched closely for signs that the time has come for a major engineering operation on the Big Ditch.

Now, upon the thirtieth anniversary July 12 of its official opening to commerce, one thing is certain: Time soon will begin to run short for the canal.

The best estimate is that in the decade between 1960 and 1970, Congress will have to make the critical decision of what the Panama Canal of the future will be. It already has a clear-cut recommendation: Conversion of the present lock-type canal to a sea-level waterway at a cost of $2,482,810,000. Construction work would take about 10 years.

Back in 1946, experts in many fields began exhaustive studies for Congress to find out how best to increase the capacity and security of the canal. Never attacked in war, it proved a potent instrument of United States defense in World War II. But the 50-mile shortcut between the Atlantic and the Pacific has too many Achilles' heels. A well-aimed bomb, a determined saboteur, a suicide ship—there are too many ways to put the valuable canal out of commission.

Shortened the War

WHAT had it done in war? The experts summed it up this way in their report to Congress:

"The importance of the Panama Canal in World War II can be measured in part by the traffic volume during the war period. Over 6400 transits of combat vessels and about 10,300 by other military craft were made during the war. . . . The loss of the canal probably would have restricted military activities and no doubt would have prolonged the war.

"Based on the volume of military traffic during the war years, an approximation has been made of the monetary savings that has accrued to the United States. This saving, which is estimated to be one and one-half billion dollars, is in shippng costs only, and does not represent the lives and material that were saved by a shortening of the war."

They concluded: "As long as ships are employed in war, the national defense requires a strong Isthmian canal."

What would happen in an atomic war? The experts had an answer:

"A single direct hit by an atomic bomb could demolish the twin lock chambers, all the lock gates and the emergency dams . . . Lingering radioactivity would require the abandonment of the lock sites . . . One new lane of locks would have to be built before the canal could return to operation. This would require at least four years. . . . The vulnerability of the present canal . . . is so marked that dependence cannot be placed on its use in war. . . . The canal as it exists today cannot be considered as meeting the future needs of national defense.

Two Liners Too Large

BUT it wasn't defense alone that entered the picture. The canal is, primarily, an instrument of peace in the service of maritime commerce of the world.

One of the obvious facts was that ships are getting too big for the canal. Already, two merchant ships, the Queen Elizabeth and the Queen Mary, not to mention some of the newest United States Navy warships, are too large for the present locks.

More important, there was the sustained increase in ships transiting the canal in both directions. The endless procession started August 14, 1914, when the SS Ancon made the first transit from the Atlantic to the Pacific. When President Woodrow Wilson on July 12, 1920, proclamed "the official and formal opening" of the Panama Canal, more than 10,000 commercial ships of many flags already had been through it. Since then, 145,000 transits by toll-paying, ocean-going ships have been entered on the canal records.

This is what the experts said in 1946:

"The capacity of the present canal is adequate so long as the average traffic does not exceed 24 ships daily or 8760 ships annually. According to (estimates) . . . this traffic volume would be reached by 1950, and after that date some delays to shipping would occur on peak traffic days during lock overhaul periods. The number of delayed ships would increase with further traffic increases, and, beginning about 1960, the delays during overhaul periods would become insupportable."

1970 Is New Date

TIME has proved the 1960 estimate high. This year's traffic is averaging around 15 ships daily, nine under the prediction of four years ago.

Gov. F. K. Newcomer, who runs the canal, says that 1970 now is estimated as the year when the canal will begin to feel the pinch of too much traffic. As soon as definite signs develop in that direction, Congress will be asked to decide what is to be done.

Of the canal's future, Newcomer said:

"General plans to meet this expansion by increasing the canal facilities have already been made and could be accomplished economically in about 10 years."

Because the canal is indispensable to world commerce and to United States national defense, the question of profit from the waterway is not the sole consideration. In terms of dollars and cents, however, the canal is no losing proposition.

Built at an original cost of $380,000,000, the canal requires an average annual expenditure of $21,000,000 for operation and maintenance, including costs of management, medical and municipal services, civil government and other charges.

The principal source of revenue is the tolls charged to commercial ships. In 36 years of operation, the canal has collected slightly over $650,000,000, of which $617,000,000 was from tolls. If tolls had been collected on traffic entitled to free use of the canal, the total would be $762,000,000.

During this period, net operating expenses before interest have totaled about $378,000,000. The capital investment is currently $534,000,000.

The complex question of tolls is now up before Congress. United States ship owners have been campaigning loudly for a reduction in tolls. They complain that they should not bear the national defense costs of the canal.

In 36 years, the canal itself and the organization which runs it have undergone little change. Only recently, two steps have been taken toward an extensive administrative reorganization. One of these—now before Congress for approval—would transform the canal enterprise into a corporate-type agency to be known as the Panama Canal Co. The other is an internal reorganization of divisions and departments authorized by presidential executive order.

One important and unanticipated factor affecting future plans for the canal is Panamanian sentiment toward the United States.

In December, 1947, the National Assembly rejected a defense agreement with the United States which would have enabled the United States to retain a score of bases which it had maintained in Panamanian territory throughout the war. Within 24 hours, American troops were pulling out of these defense sites.

Local politics played a major role in that decision. But one reason for the success of the aggressive minority that led the campaign was a built-up resentment among Panamanians against the United States, stemming from a multitude of causes, real and fancied, arising during four decades of day-to-day contact. Perhaps the best summation of it is that Panamanians feel that, as partners of the United States in the canal enterprise, they do not receive a fair share of the benefits.

Since the 1947 slap at the United States, Panamanian administrations have been anxious to show this country's good will toward the United States. Several agreements—on civil aviation, claims and jurisdiction—have been concluded.

Even the present government of President Arnulfo Arias, who was widely regarded as one of the bitterest foes of the United States in Latin America, has bent over backward to show Panama's friendly feelings.

Nevertheless, some members of the United States Congress have voiced their concern over approving an investment of more than two billion dollars without definite assurance that the United States will have the fullest facilities to defend it.

First picture of the Brookhaven cosmotron. Note "slot" for vacuum tube which will girdle the 200-foot ring

'Ring' Ready for Next Bout With Atom

By Howard W. Blakeslee
Associated Press Science Editor

UPTON, N. Y.—The great iron ring for the next attack on the Atom has been set up at the Brookhaven National Laboratory.

It has the form of an old-fashioned wedding ring, and it is 60 feet in diameter and nearly 200 feet around. It lies on a concrete floor at the center of a square hall big enough for a national convention.

Circus elephants marching around this ring would be hidden behind the iron. The ring has four breaks, like doors, each large enough for an elephant to pass through.

This huge machine, when complete, is expected to make energies exceeding two billion electron-volts, the first man-made energies to pass the billion mark. The name is cosmotron, the first of its kind, and it will cost more than three million dollars, paid by the Atomic Energy Commission. Dr. George B. Collins directs the project.

Standing outside this ring, you get a strange impression. Each segment suggests the head of a beast with jaws open. The jaws are a huge slot in the ring, 3 feet deep and 9 inches from top to bottom. The slot runs in belt position around all four sections.

This mouth will carry a plastic and metal tube, bridging all four gaps between sections of the ring. This tube is one of the world's largest vacuum tubes.

Inside, it will carry a sausage-shaped cloud, about 60 feet long, made of protons, which are nuclei of hydrogen atoms. The cloud will circle until it reaches a speed of about 186,000 miles an hour. By that time the sausage form will be squeezed into that of a worm, still 60 feet long but only about 2 inches in diameter.

At top speed, the cloud will be deflected out of the tube at one of the elephant-size gaps, much like a stream of water spurting from a nozzle. The stream will hit targets of various metals and gases. It is expected that these impacts will produce mesons, like those in cosmic rays, or other particles as yet undiscovered.

There never has been anything like this big cosmotron. A tank the size of a railroad tank car will make the protons and inject them into the tube. The injector shoots a continuous stream, but the machine breaks them into long, thin wisps. Then it will lay each of these wisps alongside another, like stacked cards, until there are enough to make the initial sausage-shaped cloud.

The principal control is the great iron ring, acting as an electromagnet. In the magnetic field, the proton cloud is bent to stay in the circular tube. The magnetic field rises so, that as the cloud circles faster, it is kept in the same path and does not fly off like a stone from a sling.

At each circuit the cloud is given a kick at one of the gaps by a machine called an oscillator. By the time the cloud has gone about as far as from here to the moon, it is ready to emerge.

30-Day Weather Forecasts Pass Tests

By Robert E. Geiger

THE weatherman is forecasting weather 30 days in advance now, and fairly close to the bullseye.

The daily weather forecast that your newspaper carries usually is for 24 or 36 hours. Weather Bureau officials say tests have shown these forecasts to be accurate about 87 times out of 100.

The Associated Press received the first six of the 30-day written forecasts started in February. Fifty-seven statements were made by the weatherman. About 45 seemed reasonably accurate when the forecast was compared with what actually occurred. This would be about 80 times out of 100.

The Weather Bureau itself uses maps and more technical methods for comparisons and it doesn't give this new service that high a rating. It hasn't made its score public. But the word "experimental" has been eliminated from the written forecast sheet, and this is sent to press services. The Weather Bureau is confident these prognostications are sufficiently accurate to be of value.

The service—a map and a forecast—is sold to subscribers for $4.80 a year. It is sold to business people mostly. Only the forecasts are made available to press services.

The 30-day forecasts differ from the daily forecasts in several important ways. Weathermen don't even call them forecasts, but 30-day outlook summaries.

General Terms Used

THE long-range summaries use only general terms. However, the accompanying maps sharply define the areas to which the weatherman is referring.

The summaries don't forecast individual storms. They aren't for a particular place, like a community, but for the whole Nation, or large regions.

They are based on the atmospheric pattern over a large portion of the earth at from 2 to 6 miles high. They predict what effect this slow-moving pattern will have up to 30 days later on earth—or that part of it called the United States.

In mid-February, the summary said temperatures up to mid-March probably would be below normal over most of the East, except northern New England and Florida, where temperatures would be slightly warmer than normal. It said temperatures in the West would be slightly above normal. Elsewhere normal temperatures were expected.

"It will feel quite wintry to the residents of the East, who have been enjoying temperatures averaging about 10 degrees above normal during the past two months," the summary said.

This came close to hitting conditions on the button—and long enough ahead to give such people as Eastern coal dealers and overcoat merchants the opportunity to time their advertising. Also for farmers to be prepared.

Young Scientist Does Job

A YOUNG weather scientist, Jerome Namias, chief of the extended forecast section, makes the 30-day forecasts.

Fifteen years ago, when he was at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Namias started studying the upper atmosphere, 2 to 6 miles above the earth. That was during the dust bowl era.

Seeking information on the causes of the drought, or the possibility of predicting such abnormal weather, Namias found the atmosphere more stable at high altitudes than nearer to earth.

He found slow-motion movements, compared with fast atmospheric action closer to earth. These movements seemed to have patterns. And the patterns seemed connected with weather weeks later on the earth's surface.

The work was begun here in 1941 and was the basis for five-day forecasts the bureau began making. The next year some experimental 30-day outlook maps were started.

In February, the bureau began issuing experimental 30-day outlook summaries with the map. The "experimental" label was dropped from the outlooks a few weeks ago, although not from the map.

The weathermen have learned that "weather" at high levels usually moves in channels. In winter, cold air may move down from the Arctic to the United States in a channel almost as well defined as an air pipe.

Network Above Earth

IMAGINE a network of these pipes, a few miles above earth, like a spider web. Imagine a giant shoving these pipes around. He moves an open end of a pipe to the North Pole. The other end he aims directly at Cheyenne, Wyo., or Chicago. He blows Arctic air through the pipe. This could bring the whole Rocky Mountain region, or the Great Lakes States, a spring blizzard, lasting perhaps a week.

Or the Great Plains might be connected with a channel from the Caribbean and get a blast of mild air from that faraway sea in mid-January.

High and low pressure pockets are associated with the way this invisible giant in the skies moves around the atmospheric channels. Between them are the channels of air, blowing in vast sweeps around the pressure pockets.

Watching the pressure areas move, Namias was able to predict 30 days in advance that the Eastern Seaboard could expect more cold and snow than usual in January, 1948. He was right.

If you can locate the birth of a storm, can you control it?

Some scientists believe it may be possible if man can develop a lever strong enough to steer a storm at the moment of its birth. They are eyeing atomic energy.

Namias declines to speculate about this. He wants to know a lot more about these births before discussing the life history and old age of a hurricane.

Taft Eases Up on Acheson in 'Afterthought' Column

crimp in his prior plans to take the sutmp for Democratic nominees.

3. House and Senate candidates will pick local and national issues best suited to each State and local community with very little overall guidance from their national committees. Both sides are agreed that every candidate is pretty much on his own.

4. So far as the makeup of the next Congress is concerned, the outlook at this moment is about where it was before the Northern Reds moved across the thirty-eighth parallel. Every Senate seat that Republicans hope to pick up, the Democrats can match with another they hope to regain.

At least, that's how matters political stood two weeks after the Red invasion of Korea. But things could change, and quick, in this fluid crisis.

He'll Let Him Stay

EVEN free-wheeling Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) is wheeling less freely in the Korean emergency.

The day after the President's decision to draw the line in Korea, Taft indorsed the move in general but bitterly attacked Secretary of State Dean Acheson and demanded his resignation.

But Taft's "Washington Report" column released to newspapers a week later was much milder. Taft still charged that Acheson's former Far Eastern policies "precipitated the danger of war" but dropped completely his call for Acheson's resignation.

Some members of his own party viewed Taft's initial attack on Acheson as an ill-timed boner that impaired his once booming prospects of reelection and further dimmed his 1952 presidential hopes.

Desperate for 1952 presidential timber, even some of the GOP "professionals," who prefer to keep the top party nomination in the Old Guard family circle, are talking about the possibility of an "Eisenhower draft."

In Focus

SENATE Foreign Relations Chairman Tom Connally has an unfailing eye for a news camera.

Last Wednesday was a hot day. Shirt-sleeved and white-gallused, Connally strolled into a subcommittee hearing on Senator William Benton's "Marshall Plan of Ideas."

Benton was testifying, and Connally took a seat at the end of the committee table. Newsreels and photographers were concentrating on World War II Chiefs Dwight D. Eisenhower and George C. Marshall, seated together in the first row.

The Texan slipped on his coat, picked up his hat and ambled over to the two former generals. In full camera range, he leaned down and whispered to them. Then he looked up and told photographers with a straight face: "I don't want any pictures."

Flash bulbs popped and the camera batteries promptly went into action again.

The fusillade over, Connally picked up his hat and blandly walked out of the hearing room.

Sharpest Attack Ever

SOUTH AMERICAN coffee operators have somehow confused Senator Guy M. Gillette (D., Iowa) with the manufacturer of a famous safety razor.

Irked at his report that high prices are caused by big profit speculations rather than by any shortage of the precious bean, the coffee dealers have replied with a propaganda offensive.

A parade in Santos, Brazil, the other day featured a float portraying a familiar razor blade descending on the head of a native. A Managua, Nicaragua, newspaper used the same symbol. Displayed first page was a hand holding a safety blade over the neck of a peon shoveling coffee, with this legend in Spanish: "The Gillette knife cuts where it hurts worst."

Since the attacks follow an identical pattern, Gillette's investigating staff suspect they all stem from a single as yet unnamed source.

Another story, widely printed in the South American press, is that the Senator (no relation to the blade manufacturer) is running for reelection this fall. This version has Gillette appealing for the vote of housewives in his State.

Fact is that Gillette was elected in 1948 for a six-year term and won't run again until 1954. The coffee people have confused him with his Republican colleague, Bourke B. Hickenlooper, up for reelection this fall.

Unruffled through it all, Gillette has no particular objection to the razor blade pun, but wants it clearly understood that his name isn't Hickenlooper.

False Whiskers

SENATE Secretary Leslie L. Biffle, who called the turn on President Truman's 1948 victory by polling farm districts as a chicken buyer, has been swamped with advice on his 1950 scouting expedition.

Biffle, whose next disguise is a top secret, will tour seven States as soon as Congress adjourns and report personally to the President on the outlook for a Congress favorable to Mr. Truman's policies.

This time, as last, Biffle will travel incognito and alone. He's already turned down a $1000 offer from one magazine simply for the privilege of letting a writer travel with him.

Friends have been busy thinking up disguises for the presidential pollster. Among those rejected: (1) That he sell Bibles; (2) that he work as a gas station attendant in each State; (3) that he drive a milk truck, and (4) that he try his hand as a house-to-house book salesman.

About the only thing not suggested is that Biffle, whose passion for anonymity is a Capitol legend, simply go as himself.

Agriculture Loses a Perennial Ghost

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

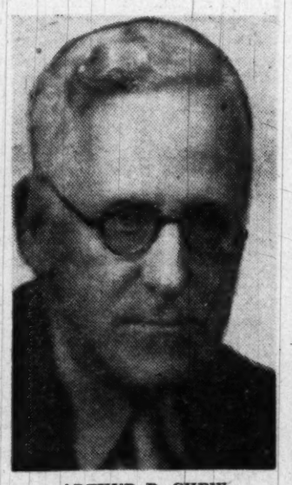
THE ghost of eight Secretaries of Agriculture walked out of the Agriculture Department the other day.

He is Arthur P. Chew, who was brought to Washington by the late Secretary Henry C. Wallace in 1923. His chief job each year since has been to write the annual report of the secretary. Down the years it has developed into a masterpiece of succinct reporting of the affairs of the sprawling agency.

When Chew held his last official gabfest with some of his old cronies at the department, he regaled them for an hour with personal anecdotes about the secretaries whose names were put on the articles he wrote.

Thumbnail Sketches

FOR publication, he declined to rate the secretaries in the order in which they stand in his esteem. He said they all had their faults and their virtues. "I would find it difficult to compare them," he commented. But to The Washington Post, he gave these thumbnail descriptions of some of the men to whom he was a shadow:



ARTHUR P. CHEW
. . . Succinct reporting

HENRY CANTWELL WALLACE, secretary from 1921 to 1924 in the Cabinets of President Harding and Coolidge. "He had a touch of earthy humanity about him. He was perhaps my closest friend of them all. One day he said to me: 'Chew, what do you know about agriculture?' I told him nothing. 'Then you're just the bird I want to write my annual report,' Wallace replied. That's how I got the job."

HOWARD M. GORE, who served a brief time after H. C. Wallace's death. "He wasn't in long enough to show what he could do."

WILLIAM M. JARDINE, secretary from 1925 to 1929 in the Coolidge Cabinet. "He was a real guy. One day I wrote a story for Barron's Weekly that the agricultural economists in the department were like business English—entirely phony. The head of BAE went to Jardine and raised hell. Demanded that I be fired. But Jardine told him it was good for 'you fellows to hear things like that about you."

ARTHUR M. HYDE, 1929 to 1932, under President Hoover. "He had the gift of poker-faced humor. Once I called his attention that in his report I had blamed a lot of the farmers' troubles on the tariff. I asked if he thought that was wise. Without a flicker of an eyelash, he answered: 'Let's blame some of it on the Democrats.'"

ABOUT the four others, who are living, Chew reserved comment except to remark that Henry A. Wallace "will be remembered for his tremendous ability as an agricultural scientist long after his excursions into politics are forgotten."

About Clinton P. Anderson he remarked: "He is the quickest man to learn that I ever saw. He didn't know a thing about the department when he came in, but there was little he didn't know in a short time. He has the ability to grasp the complexities of a confused problem quicker than anyone I ever saw."

Indefensible

The House recently voted to cut 1.2 million dollars from the Federal Government's meager contribution to the District. Fortunately the Senate Appropriations Committee has voted to eliminate the 10 per cent reduction, despite the fact that a number of Senators have indorsed this indefensible cut because the District has a prospective surplus of more than four million dollars. It should not be necessary to remind members of Congress that this surplus has been achieved by levying higher taxes on realty and imposing sales taxes on consumers. It should not be necessary to remind them that dire hardships are common in this rich community, because the funds appropriated for relief purposes are shockingly inadequate. They ought to know, too, that Washington needs many times five million dollars to build more schools and improve its institutional facilities. The surplus, in fact, is made possible by the refusal of Congress to appropriate sufficient funds to meet urgent community needs.

Senator Hunt pointed out that the Federal contribution, which amounted to 40 percent of the District budget in 1922, is now only 10 percent of the total, although the Federal Government now owns about 42 percent of the District acreage and pays no taxes on its holdings. If the existence of a small surplus warrants any form of tax relief, it should at least take the form of a reduction in the tax burdens of residents, who are required to carry much more than their fair share of the expenditures incurred for the benefit of both the Federal and the local governments.

Pitcher's Progress

The first game on the Fourth of July at Griffith Stadium lasted almost three and a half hours without going into extra innings. The Senators used up five pitchers who gave up, all told, 17 hits; the Yankees used three, who permitted 13 hits. Yet the game was not one of those freaks that can occur now and then in every season and in every league. It was more or less characteristic of the 1950 quality of baseball. There have been many games this year that have lasted much longer and in which the scoring has been much higher. The Red Sox, for example, set a new record by scoring 29 runs in one game against St. Louis. The Cleveland Indians not long ago scored 14 runs in a single inning—something that had happened only once before in this century.

Something is manifestly wrong with the big-league pitching. It is a very remarkable feat nowadays when any pitcher in either league manages to finish the game in which he is started. And with the season half over, there are only four pitchers (two in each league) who have been able to win 10 or more games. The stories now being raked up about the days when Jack Chesbro won 41 games out of 55 pitched in the course of a single season seem almost incredible.

The question is whether the present-day pitchers are by the standards of the early 1900s a degenerate race, or whether the gradual modifications in the pitching rules have stacked the percentages so heavily in favor of the batters that all comparison is irrelevant and unjust. Sometimes the controversy turns about the character of the baseballs now in use. Many professionals believe that it is the greater resilience of the modern baseball that has made most of the difference; but the manufacturers insist that the difference is largely imaginary—that the specifications for the ball are pretty much the same as they have always been.

One important difference is the fact that dozens of baseballs are used in every game played, whereas formerly the game was played out with the same set of balls with which it was begun. Now umpires order a ball discarded at the slightest discoloration or abrasion. The white, glistening ball of the contemporary game is much easier for the batsman's eye to follow than was the old-fashioned league baseball, stained after a few innings by grass and tobacco juice. Certain effective pitches, such as the spitball, have been outlawed, and the advantage in the batter's favor further increased by the new balk rules.

All this has certainly multiplied the strain. But there also appears to have been a sorry deterioration in the art of pitching itself. No matter what the basis of comparison, it is plain enough that there are no longer any peers of Mathewson, Chesbro, Plank, Joss, Walsh, Young, Alexander, Dean or Grove. Some experts, such as Mr. Rogers Hornsby and Mr. Freddy Fitzsimmons, think that pitchers nowadays are too spoiled and lazy; others like Mr. Dave Danforth incline to put the blame on night baseball, and particularly on the inferior lighting in the minor leagues. This, observed Mr. Danforth, deceives both the scouts and the statisticians. In a park where the batters can't see anything to hit almost any pitcher looks better than he is.

Agent Of The U. N.

The only legal problem that has given United Nations officials any real concern in connection with the U. N. policy in Korea has been successfully worked out in the Security Council's resolution asking the United States to designate the commander of the anti-aggression forces. Some experts on the U. N. Charter had feared that it would be difficult to carry out military police action in Korea without activating the Military Staff Committee on which the Soviet Union is represented. The Charter provides that the Military Staff Committee shall be responsible under the Council "for the strategic direction of any armed forces placed at the disposal of the Security Council." But the Charter has proved to be flexible. Unity of command is being achieved without any reference to the Military Staff Committee.

It was obvious at the outbreak of the fighting that the Security Council could not itself put down the aggression of the North Koreans. No troops had been placed at its disposal, as contemplated by the Charter. But the Council could and did act under Article 39 of Chapter VII. This Article directs the Council to determine the existence of any breach of the peace or act of aggression and to "make recommendations . . . to maintain or restore international peace and security." The Council took such steps in its resolutions of June 25 and 27. On Friday it took the additional step of "recommending" that all members responding to its call place their forces at the disposal of a unified command under direct control of the United States. In other words, the Council gave its blessing to the practical measures already taken by the nations cooperating in this joint undertaking.

Use of the United Nations flag, along with the national flags of the nations resisting this aggression, was also authorized. The United Nations is as much committed as if forces directly under its command had gone into action. We think the Council is to be highly commended both for shouldering the responsibility laid upon it by the Charter and for working out a practical means of making its will effective. No doubt the logic of events drove it to the conclusion that the anti-aggression forces in Korea should be placed directly under American command. But the initiative came from the British and French rather than the American delegates. And since 46 of the 59 members of the United Nations have approved the use of armed forces in Korea since the United States took the lead in supplying men and equipment, it may be assumed that the arrangement meets with general satisfaction.

The most heartening fact about the Korean episode thus far is the courageous and forthright manner in which the Security Council has responded to the challenge of armed aggression. The dramatic manner in which it has emerged from its moribund state has been tonic to the entire free world. In our enthusiasm for what the Council is now doing, however, it is well to remember that it was able to act in this emergency only because of the Russian boycott of the U. N. in violation of Article 28. The Soviet's incredible blunder in absenting itself from the Council has resulted in a demonstration of unity against aggression that scarcely seemed possible a few weeks ago. The disturbing thought is that the Council's spurt of activity could be squelched over night by the return of a Soviet delegate to the Council. Of course, Russia could not stall the forces that have been put into motion. But her veto could prevent the Council from taking any further action to counteract the present or future acts of aggression. That possibility must be giving the jubilant statesmen at Lake Success more worry than is apparent in any of their current statements.

Tall Talking

As in primitive societies, a surprise or a reverse always invites a quest for a scapegoat, and Korea is no exception. This newspaper has itself indulged in it. We joined, for instance, in the lambasting of CIA for deficiencies in the reporting on Korea. In this we find we were mistaken. Though the case for a reshuffle of CIA remains, criticism of its reporting and its analysis of the pre-invasion situation in Korea was based on an erroneous news report. The indictment of CIA for failure to analyze that situation was a misconstruction of Admiral Hillenkoeter's secret testimony by a Senator long addicted to leaking a mixture of truth and falsity after executive sessions. The wonder is that the newsmen still continue to lend credence to what the Senator says—at least they should give his name when they give publicity to what he says.

What was wrong in this matter was simply the failure of the customers of CIA to act upon CIA reports, and this is due to the low standing of the intelligence agency. Certainly CIA was far more reliable than the military men on the spot. These men were in error as much for tall talking as for faulty reporting and false assurances. It is the usual thing, we suppose, to praise proteges, but in this case the overestimate of the South Koreans and their capabilities tripped up the ECA officials. These officials allowed themselves to echo the rosy enthusiasm of the military mission. It was a natural mistake to make, especially when appropriations were involved—natural, that is, to seize upon a good report by experts on the scene and repeat it as your own when under questioning. But the habit of tall talking is a shortcoming that ought to be curbed. It is apt to put people and government in a fool's paradise, as well as to promote self-kidding. If there is one lesson that ought to be learned, it is that an honest and clear-eyed appraisal is the best policy, and that any deviation from it in behalf of clients or proteges is a disservice to the American interest. Too much belief in special pleading and too much glossing over of disagreeable facts can only lead to trouble for all of us.

Futility On Point IV

It is hard to imagine a worse time for the kind of narrow-mindedness shown by the Senate Appropriations Committee in its decision announced yesterday to cut Point IV funds in half. If the cut should be sustained by the Senate, it would mean that the United States could conduct practically no independent program of technical assistance over large areas of the world at the very time that the Russians are doing their utmost to exploit discontent. It would be tantamount to telling India, for example, that in return for her support on Korea we would eliminate the technical aid on which she has been counting heavily.

Of the President's original request for 45 million dollars for 1951, the Senate authorized 35 million. The Appropriations Committee, however, slashed this to 17.6 million, including 7.6 million for existing programs under the Institute of Inter-American Affairs and the Smith-Mundt Act. This leaves 10 million. Yet the United States already is committed to furnish 12½ million dollars to the United Nations technical assistance program for the period ending December 31, 1951. Even if ECA appropriations might be squeezed to provide technical help for colonial Africa and southeast Asia under the "general area of China" authorization, there would be no such funds for India, Pakistan and the Middle East. Yet it is precisely in those areas where this most enlightened form of help—the stimulation for self-help—is most vitally needed.

The Administration must bear some responsibility for the bungling manner in which the whole Point IV program has been handled since its inception 18 months ago. But Point IV is more than an Administration proposal; it is an American answer to a desperate need. Yet the Appropriations Committee seemed to retain a preconceived hostility toward the program, except for the protests of one or two members. Assistant Secretary of State Thorp, for example, was browbeaten almost from the moment he set foot in the committee room, and was never allowed to complete his prepared statement.

One would think that the parallel with our world information program, which most legislators now recognize to be inadequate, would be strikingly clear. It costs a lot more to fight communism after the fact than to prevent it from taking hold in the first place. In justice to this country's interest in the world struggle, the Senate should take a sounder view of what is meant by real economy than its short-sighted committee has done. As Senator Lodge said in commenting on the information program, it is American deeds that count. "Isn't it true," he asked, "that a doctor going into a fever-ridden area is our best story?"

India's Role

The close interest that Premier Nehru is maintaining in the handling of the crisis in Korea may be of great significance in liquidating it. To be sure, no aid in the police action can be expected, according to a statement delivered at Lake Success, but there are other ways in which India can be of inestimable service in restoring world peace. No doubt Moscow was as much surprised over Nehru's response to the American resolution in the Security Council as it was over the American initiative of the resolution and action under it. Moscow must have been discomfited by subsequent steps. The Indians are said to have made their position crystal clear in representations to the Kremlin. They are not deluded by the casuistries and the sophistries emanating from Mr. Gromyko, but are pointing out that the very absence of Soviet Russia from the Security Council is in itself a violation of the Charter. Article 28 says that the Security Council shall be "so organized as to be able to function continuously" and that for this purpose each member shall "be represented at all times at the seat of the organization." Boycott, in other words, cannot condemn the Security Council to impotence, and, furthermore, carries with it a condemnation of the absentee.

It is time, we think, to pay more attention to India's views on policy in Asia. There are complaints that Washington neglects New Delhi in favor of London when exchanges are necessary on problems in Asia in which India has a vital interest. The complaints may simply arise out of suspicion, but, if there is any justification for them, the situation should be remedied. In the last 12 months there has certainly been a tendency to ignore the Indian solutions for the issues in southeast Asia which are plaguing the world. It would be well to take fresh stock of them. They are, for instance, opposed to the posture that this country has assumed in Indo-China, and they are in the lead of the move to regularize the position of China vis-a-vis the United Nations. India's attitude will put India in a position of great diplomatic strength when the aggressor in Korea has been pushed beyond the thirty-eighth parallel. This country, as the leading defender of the peace, should be the first to take advantage of it.

Intervention In Korea

May I be permitted comment on the letter of Wesley M. Bagby, which appeared in your July 2 issue?

Mr. Bagby seems to feel that our intervention in South Korea "has virtually completed the transformation of the U. N. into an anti-Comintern pact." I venture to suggest that that transformation has come about as a result of Soviet intransigence. We have been told from Moscow with unvarying dogmatism that everybody is out of step but Uncle Joe, until it has begun to be clear that the Russians really believe it.

Mr. Bagby further states "to stand rigidly for a status quo is not only untenable and wrong—it is suicidal." In a volatile and fluid world this observer has discerned nothing so unchanging as the Soviet insistence that the game be played their way or else. . . . The status quo of the Russian slave laborer, would, I imagine, put quite a strain on the industrial worker of the Western world were he forced to adhere to it. It might even make the citizens of some of the less advanced Asiatic countries, who at least have a chance to air their grievances against their governments, think twice before they accepted the liberating doctrines of the Kremlin.

The most status quo object on the midtwentieth century political stage is the spectacle of the Politburo, a group of men hung, dead center, on a power obsession which seems to have blinded them to reason, logic and even self interest.

Mr. Bagby says "the decision in Kora was the decision of a militarist," and there he is certainly right, for the decision in Korea was made north of the thirty-eighth parallel and constituted armed invasion of the territory of an autonomous republic which was quite within its legal rights in asking aid of the United Nations. In the absence of a statue or law against aggression and of a world police force capable of enforcing such law, it became the unhappy duty of the United States Government as a signatory member, in good faith, of the U. N. Charter to act in the capacity of policeman for the U. N.

"Far East"

Your July 5 editorial, "Far East," indicates that a strengthened U. N. may be able to deal with North Korea, once its armies have been forced back behind the thirty-eighth parallel. There is no longer any reason why the makeshift division of Korea by the thirty-eighth parallel should be recognized as binding upon the U. S.

The solemn undertakings which Russia assumed at Yalta when this commitment was made have all been broken. It is time we recognized that Yalta was a tremendous mistake, despite our reaffirmation of its terms in the Potsdam agreement. It is time we took a realistic view of the world situation. We are playing with abstractions while Russia deals in the events themselves. Were Franklin D. Roosevelt alive today he would be the first to realize the true situation.

Let the U. N. assign all of Korea, north and south, to the U. S. as a trusteeship and then let us occupy it up to the Manchurian border. Let us then train Japanese divisions forthwith to take over the actual policing of the border under U. N. auspices. Then withdraw our troops but keep them in Japan for any emergency that Russia may next cause in the Far East.

Foreign Registry

I'm an American seaman, a ship's officer, trained and experienced in my profession. Trained, incidentally by the Government in 1942 at considerable expense, and with the assurance that there would always be a place for my skill.

It takes years of training and experience to make a capable engineer, or mate.

Today I cannot get a ship. The principal reason for this situation is that ship operators are permitted to register their vessels under foreign registry, such as Panama, Honduras, Finland, Norway, and countless other countries. In this manner they evade complying with rigid American inspection laws, with hiring American crews and paying them American wages.

These vessels are American owned, and taxpayers are still paying for some of them. The wages paid foreign seamen are not taxed, nor does the money remain in this country. What kind of a deal is this? If the American railroad operators imported cheap foreign labor to run their roads, there'd be an awful scream. Isn't the deal we are getting essentially the same?

"Veteran Preference"

I want to take a vigorous exception to your July 4 editorial indorsing the suggestion of former Civil Service Commissioner Arthur Flemming concerning veterans preference when he appeared before a congressional committee recently.

The preferential treatment accorded to veterans is no more a departure from the merit principle than many practices which are constantly indulged in by Federal personnel officials. Veterans preference does not lower the efficiency of the Federal departments. I have had opportunity to observe many representative veterans of World War II in the Federal agencies, and I can truthfully say that the majority of them are more efficient than nonveterans.

These deserving citizens proved themselves very efficient in military operations of World War II. But for their heroic and efficient labors, there would be no "merit system" and no "civil service" jobs for anyone.

I am not a veteran, and so I am not begging for any points that would accrue to my benefit. But I am an American, and I do like to see my fellow citizens actually get a fair deal, not the empty promises of Trumanism. To my fellow citizens who begrudge the 5 and 10 points to veterans, may I suggest that they put on a uniform and depart for the fighting front in Korea. They will have an entirely different attitude about veterans preference when they return to America—if they do.

MARTIN S. PRATT.

"Sensible Veto"

In editorials published in your issues of both June 27, and 28, you expressed approval of the action of President Truman in vetoing H. R. 87, which would grant credit for military service to veterans of World War II, who entered the postal service within a limited period after discharge. You say this bill "would grant a special privilege based on fiction." Actually, it would be more proper to describe the veto message as based on fiction.

The President obviously had not been furnished with the true facts regarding this bill. Your statement that "Its effect would be to promote veterans over other postal employes of similar qualifications and tenure" is a rewording of a similar statement made in the veto message, which stated "It would promote veterans over the heads of nonveterans of equal ability and capacity." These statements contain no facts.

The bill does not provide promotions or affect the seniority of the veterans involved. It simply includes their military service in computing their salaries for the positions they hold. Your editorials also indicate that you oppose this legislation because it applies only to a group of veterans in the postal service. It would be just as logical for you to oppose benefits for disabled veterans, simply because all veterans did not become disabled. Those groups suffered a specific loss and specific legislation was enacted to help in overcoming that loss. H.R.87 also partly repays veterans in the postal service for a specific loss suffered by them.

While it might not be possible in every instance to prove that the veteran affected would have been in the postal service if he had not been called to service in the armed forces, the fact that these veterans did seek employment in the postal service soon after their discharge from the armed forces indicates that they were interested in the postal service as a career and in most cases would have been in the postal service if they had not been called into the armed forces.

The cost that you quote of 163 million dollars, also taken from the veto message, belongs in the "fiction" argument against the bill. Approximately 75,000 veterans would benefit from the enactment of H.R.87 and the average estimated benefit would be $225 for the fiscal year 1951, which would make the cost of this legislation around 17 million dollars for that year. The cost figure used in the veto message is supposed to be an all-time cost which is a system seldom, if ever, used in determining the costs of governmental operations. Actually, there would be no cost at all after a few years, because of the fact that the veterans involved would then be in the salary grade that they would have advanced to without the enactment of H.R.87.

Your arguments that H.R. 87 should not be enacted because of the fact that Congress has not enacted legislation putting in effect the recommendations of the Hoover Commission is hard to connect or to understand. The Post Office Department and postal employes would be glad to see legislation enacted that would provide for any improvement in the postal service whether the legislation come from the recommendations of the Hoover Commission or from any other surce.

The provisions of H.R. 87 do not establish any new privilege or principle. The facts are that identical legislation was enacted shortly after the end of World War I (Sec. 107, Title 39, U. S. Code) and veterans of that war who entered the postal service soon after their discharge were given credit for their military service in computing their salaries. Certainly we should give the veterans of World War II the same benefits.

Hiding Behind The Satellites

By Andre Visson

Russia And Korea

THE MOST significant Soviet features of the cold war have been subversion and hypocrisy. They marked the establishment of Soviet control over eastern Europe. They marked the unsuccessful Soviet attempt to take over Iran. We find the same features present in Korea. In Korea, as everywhere else, the Soviets have hidden themselves behind their satellites. It is always the satellites that make the move.

But there is a substantial difference between the Korean situation and the situations in those unfortunate countries taken over by the Soviets. In Poland, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, Moscow used the native Communists, who—because of the presence of the Soviet army either on the territory or along the borders of their respective countries—succeeded in establishing themselves in power by a coup. Moscow tried to apply the same tactics in Iran, but failed because United Nations pressure brought about the withdrawal of the Soviet occupation forces from northern Iran. Once the Soviet troops were withdrawn from Azerbaijan, the so-called autonomous regime of Azerbaijan was unable to resist the Iranian gendarmerie and collapsed.

In Korea the Soviets once again used their satellites. But this time they used them in overt aggression—having first made sure that they were adequately equipped and armed to achieve the objective.

AS REVOLTED as we were by the Communist coups in eastern and central Europe, we nonetheless accepted the Communist governments resulting from these coups as if they were the legitimate governments of those unfortunate countries. But the overt aggression in Korea we could not accept. This time we felt we had to act.

Since our Korean friends turned out to be too weak to resist the better armed aggressors, we decided that, together with other members of the United Nations, we would take up arms to drive the aggressors back. Our recourse to arms was not because Southern Korea was strategically important to us. It was to preserve peace—peace threatened by the Soviet organized aggression from northern Korea.

The free world understood this. Our action was hailed and supported by practically all the free nations of the world. And of all the suport we have received, none is perhaps more significant and more heartening than that from India. The government of Nehru enjoys great prestige in Asia. It has been very anxious to maintain its freedom of action. It recognized the Communist regime in China and abstained from recognizing the anti-Communist regime in Indo-China. It has tried to remain aloof from the conflict between the totalitarian East and the democratic West. But in Korea it realized that the democratic West, headed by the United States, was not seeking any advantages for itself, but was defending the principle of independence, which is the political religion of Nehru's government.

LIKE ALL the nations in western Europe and in Latin America, India has recognized that our action in Korea was prompted by our desire to preserve peace. We can preserve peace only if we succeed in localizing the Korean conflict. To this end we accepted the fiction that the Korean conflict was strictly between the Communist and non-Communist Koreans. We appealed to Moscow to help us localize the Korean conflict without accusing her of having had a hand in it. We thus offered her the opportunity to save face. But Moscow did not avail herself of this opportunity. On the contrary, she came out with new slander and branded us the aggressors.

This may be a very dangerous Soviet blunder. We have accepted the Communist challenge in Korea. We will—if necessary—accept the Soviet challenge also. We have avoided any provocative words or action. But we cannot indefinitely tolerate Soviet provocations. We know that the Korean operation may be long and costly. We are determined not to lose our temper. But we are equally determined to see the matter through to the end. No Soviet protests or threats will stop us from achieving our objective—which is the objective of all free nations. If Moscow wants to prevent the outbreak of a world war, Stalin and his henchmen in the Politburo would do well to keep this in mind.

Korean Unity

The other day a radio commentator told his listening audience that if they wanted to know how the Russians felt, they should imagine a similar situation to that in Korea taking place in lower California with the Russians fighting to maintain a foothold in that area.

Of course, we in this country who are 5000 miles or so from Korea and have never invaded another country in times of peace, cannot understand why the North Koreans would want to break through the thirty-eighth parallel and unify the country.

No country, especially one which has been long deprived of its independence, will permit its land to be artificially divided by external powers. The miserable rout of the South Koreans despite our extensive aid to them proves that Korea wants unity and independence.

Matter of Fact

The Real Tragedy of Forrestal

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

IT IS instructive to look back now, from the grim viewpoint of the Korean war, upon the moment when the final tragedy of James V. Forrestal was acted out upon the sordid Washington stage. Who now remembers how Forrestal's successor as Secretary of Defense used to explain that the first sign of "poor Jim's breakdown" was Forrestal's desire to spend so much upon defense? Who now recalls the charming hints that Forrestal was insanely fearful of the Soviets?

Yet the real tragedy of James Forrestal was not that his heart and strength broke at last, under the heavy burden of his work and the strain of perpetual calumny. The real tragedy of Forrestal was that he failed in his task itself, when he failed, in November, 1948, to make the President grasp the need for a serious defense effort. This was the turning point, when we took the road that had led us, inexorably and inescapably, to Korea.

In any inquest upon this great error of American policy, one must bear in mind the political atmosphere of the time, which is symbolized by conservative Republicans voting the straight Communist Party line on foreign and defense measures. But in any such inquest, the primary blame must be placed upon the responsible leaders of the Administration, who were too timid or too stupid to tell the country the truth, and then to challenge the Republican party-liners to do their worst.

Began With Prague

THE moment when this country began to be deceived can be rather precisely dated. As early as 1947, Forrestal and Robert A. Lovett had seen the urgent need to back up our policy of firmness toward Soviet aggression with solid military strength. After the Czech coup d'etat, an emergency buildup of American strength was initiated by Forrestal, with the President's approval. By the summer of 1948, when the Atlantic Pact was born in the minds of Lovett, Forrestal and Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, plans were being made to continue this buildup of strength in an orderly, continuous manner.

Had those plans of Forrestal's been carried out, there can be no doubt whatever that the Kremlin would never have dared to launch the attack upon Korea. Had those plans been carried out, we should by now possess a powerful armament, instead of being terrifyingly weak and appallingly deficient in many of the most critical weapons. Had those plans been carried out, there would be no need to worry today about how to deter a repetition of the Korean attack somewhere else, when all the poor power of this country has been committed in the rough Korean hills.

There was nothing unbearable, moreover, in the national effort that Forrestal proposed. For the 1949-50 budget, he urged expenditure of 17 billion dollars, with rises thereafter to an annual level around 19 billion. This was the cost of real strength, sufficient to defend the Western world, before the problem got out of hand. It is nothing to what we shall have to spend now.

But Louis A. Johnson then wanted Forrestal's job. The great Gen. Harry Vaughan hated Forrestal's guts. Treasury Secretary John Snyder wanted no increase of taxes and a more nearly balanced budget. And President Truman was suffering from the peculiar cockiness induced by his victory at the polls.

By a combination of these causes, when the next year's budget was formally closed in November, 1948, Forrestal's last plea for a serious defense effort was rejected by President Truman. A 14-billion-dollar budget ceiling was enforced, which meant that we would buy all the permanent overhead of the armed services, with no possibility of increased strength. And a little later, Secretary Johnson moved into Forrestal's office in his role as the great economizer.

Great Gaps Slashed

WHAT Johnson then proceeded to do, increased tenfold the effects of the President's refusal to listen to Forrestal. In the name of "economy," a still lower level of expenditure was suddenly commanded. Marine battalions were suppressed. Aircraft replacement rates were slashed to ribbons. Research and development were slowed down. Great gaps in our strength, such as our weaknesses in tanks and tactical aircraft for supporting ground forces, were blandly ignored. And the loss of vital strength was veiled in untruth.

The Kremlin saw all this; saw the idiotic Administration response to the first warnings, such as the Soviet atomic bomb; saw the Atlantic Pact itself being transformed into a mockery. The whole process of weakening America, of refusing to build up the strength of the West, of trying to get by with transparent fakery, was an open invitation to Soviet aggression. That invitation was accepted two weeks ago.

There was no alternative to doing what President Truman then did, in answering force with force. But at this moment, it is well to remember who were the guilty men, if only because the drama of November, 1948, is now obviously being repeated at the White House. But the issue now is whether all this Nation's resources are to be mobilized at once, to repair the defenses of the West in the time that is left to us.

Fulton Oursler's Modern Parables

Was It a Miracle?

DEAR FRIENDS AND GENTLE HEARTS:

I am not quite sure what happened in this story; only a scientist or perhaps a poet could fully explain it. Was it an accident? A coincidence? A result of natural laws?

Or was it a miracle?

I have my opinion and you, I am sure, will have yours.

But I had the word of the woman herself that the story is true. It happened in the early days of this century on a small ranch in the Far West. There lived in a board and tarpaper shack on those desolate acres a man called John, his wife, Bessie, and their two small children. They were homesteaders and were trying to make their own little paradise out of their sweat and their dreams.

Once every three weeks John went to town, riding off in a red-painted buckboard drawn by the family mare. It took him a day to get to the nearest town. He would stay overnight, buy provisions and drive back the following morning. Thus, every three weeks for two or three days, Bessie was left alone with her 10-month-old baby boy and her 4-year-old daughter.

SHE was a wife filled with the old spirit of the pioneers, and was never afraid when left alone, even at night, when she could hear the howling of coyotes and sometimes the scream of a wildcat. And nothing ever happened to make her afraid until one day in the middle of summer, when all the land laid blistering under the sun and John drove off to town after kissing Bessie goodbye.

Left alone, Bessie turned at once to the hardest task she had to do that day, chopping pine logs for the wood stove. This was to be her baking day, and she needed fuel for the kitchen range. Leaving the children playing in the kitchen, Bessie went out to the woodpile in back of the house. With an ax in her hand, she bent over and lifted two small logs. Then, without warning, it happened.

Rearing before her, puffing out its long brown body and making a shrill rattling sound with its tail, was the most dreaded living thing in the plains country—a prairie rattler. Instantly the scaly head darted forward and buried its fangs in Bessie's ankle. The next moment she had killed the snake with her ax, but she knew it was too late.

For she knew there was now enough poison in her bloodstream to kill three men.

WHAT could she do? No help was near. She was alone with Johnny, who was 10 months old and had not yet learned to walk, and Kitty, who was 4. There was no time to think of herself. There was only a very little time left to think and do for them.

"I must bake the bread!" she told herself. "I must finish the loaves. There is some milk handy—that and the bread will keep them alive."

In an inferno of heat, she toiled over the stove, piling wood on the flames. Sick and weak as she was, with blind spots dancing before her eyes, she prayed while she chopped more kindling wood and showed her little girl how to keep the fire going. Carefully she counseled the child: Soon mother would take a long, long sleep. Kitty must feed Johnny and tend him. Over and over she repeated the instructions, while the sweat poured from her body.

And it was that pouring sweat and that inferno of heat that washed out the poison from her bloodstream and saved her life. If Bessie had sat down and waited, she would have died. As it was, she was ill, almost to unconsciousness, but she recovered.

Was it merely her physical exertion, the terrific pouring out of perspiration, that cleansed her system of poison? Was it that she prayed? Was it a miracle?

Somewhere the answer lies in the dynamic principle of love that serves the helpless. None of us can ever go wrong with that principle.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Tydings Favors 12-Man Red Probe

By Drew Pearson

SHORTLY before the Korean outbreak, a secret night meeting was held in the White House regarding the now somewhat forgotten McCarthy investigation. Subject of discussion was how to wind up the Senate probe of McCarthy's communism charges.

Attending the meeting were Senators Tydings of Maryland, McMahon of Connecticut and Green of Rhode Island, all members of the Senate Committee, together with Vice President Barkley and Attorney General McGrath.

Tydings told the President he planned to wind up the McCarthy hearings almost immediately and predicted that this would cause a storm of G. O. P. criticism. Therefore, he proposed that the White House immediately follow up the Senate's final report by proposing a 12-man commission—four appointed by the White House, four by the Speaker, and four by the Vice President—to investigate communism any place in the Government.

Senator Green of Rhode Island and Attorney General McGrath, who comes from the same State, were opposed to the idea. They said that the Senate was merely passing the buck. Having started to do a job, the Senate should not drop it like a hot potato, they argued.

Vice President Barkley and Truman were noncommittal, but, as the meeting adjourned, it looked as if the President might follow Tydings' advice.

In view of the intervening Korean crisis, however, advisers indicate the President believes the Nation should now be thoroughly convinced that the State Department is anti-Communist.

Taft in Reverse

LIKABLE, impulsive Bob Taft should be careful how he chalks up the mistakes of others, for sometimes the tables get turned on him.

Taft made quite a speech recently, arguing that Dean Acheson had been "reversed by his superiors" as the result of American intervention in Korea, and demanded that he resign. What Taft neglected to mention, however, is how he reversed his own policy on Korea—overnight.

As late as the day after the Communist invasion of Korea, Taft pleaded behind the closed doors of the Republican Senate caucus that he didn't want to be "stampeded into another war."

Yet, two days later, following President Truman's order sending American forces into Korea, Taft proclaimed to the Senate: "I approve of the changes now made in our foreign policy . . . I feel that we must back up our troops, where they have been sent by the President, with unstinted support!"

In exactly the same speech, however, Taft called for Acheson's resignation because his Korean policy had been reversed.

Earlier Invasion

AN invasion of Southern Korea was attempted and turned back in March. This is revealed in a translation of Korean newspapers for June 12.

On that date, Capt. Kim Yung Chol, deputy chief of the Korean navy, reported that an attempt was made to land Communist troops and guerillas in the South in March, and that it was turned back by the navy.

Captain Kim also announced, "of late, an increasing number of unidentified submarines and naval vessels are infesting our waters near Woolneung Island and Pohang, apparently with the aim of spying on our naval facilities and measuring the depth of our waters."

Also, on May 26, a Russian vessel was sunk three miles off Wonsan.

For the past two months, scattered fighting of advanced patrols involving as many as 3000 troops around the thirty-eighth parallel has been reported. Korean officers have claimed they saw Russian military observers with the Communist units from the North.

Another Joe in Limelight

SIGNS OF THE TIMES: Gen. Joseph Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, plodding down a long corridor of the Pentagon lugging a detailed map of Korea . . . silent throngs on Pennsylvania Avenue outside the White House . . . Senators clustered around a huge map of Eastern Asia in the rear of the chamber . . . members of the Foreign Relations Committee grouped around a television set watching the U. N. Security Council.

Red Campaign Finds Few Takers

sion" was premeditated. General MacArthur's order to arrest Japanese Communist leaders last month was, according to an official story fed to Polish listeners, one device "to paralyze in advance those forces which were likely to impair United States aggression." The swift convening of the Security Council, and its swift action, were only further proofs that the United States had laid its plans well in advance.

Sometimes there are pleasant embellishments, such as the statement in one of Ho Chi Minh's broadcasts last Wednesday: "The rain of fire that the reactionary Americans have started is smearing on their faces a bloody color that will never be erased."

The Great Peacemaker

BUT the picture of the munitions makers, militarists, bankers and puppets, all jumbled together as in Gustav Dore's engravings of hell, is only a part of the Communist stage-setting. The other part is a picture of millions in all countries signing the so-called Stockholm Peace Petition, which calls for the outlawing of the atomic bomb.

Senator William Benton testified last week that 5½ million North Koreans—more than half the entire population—signed this petition shortly before the invasion began. The Russians now say the signers total 100 million. Editorials in the Soviet newspapers, faithfully copied by the comrades in other countries, tell of the "boundless devotion" of the Soviet people to "the standard bearer of peace throughout the world, Comrade Stalin."

And in the past few days the Soviet press has been drenched with stories of "spontaneous" factory meetings at which workers denounce the "blood-stained American imperialists" and avow their own love of peace.

It is this contrast—between American war-mindedness and Soviet peacefulness—that the Kremlin wants to hammer into the world's consciousness if it can. If the outer world were as gullible or deluded or terrified as the world of the 1930s, the Soviet story might have some appeal to Europeans who have had enough of war, or to Asians who are poor and hungry, or to anyone who dislikes the United States for any of a thousand reasons.

The tremendous and reassuring fact, so far, is that the non-Soviet world just doesn't believe a word of it. There is not a shred of evidence, so far, that the Communist "line" has swayed any waverers anywhere.

Their Only Source

STILL, officials here and abroad are keeping a watchful eye on the world's response to the Kremlin's campaign, and for good reasons. The propaganda drive, if continued at its present fever pitch, can foment hate and fanaticism among millions of the "captive peoples" who have no other sources of information. It can also inflame millions in Asia who may hear stories of Americans shooting or bombing helpless fellow Asians.

Its intention, as Secretary Acheson said last week, is to sow confusion, doubt and fear, and it can sprout a crop of dragons' teeth if it can find receptive soil.

To counteract it, the United States is doing what it can to broadcast and spread the true story of the Korean invasion and its dramatic aftermath. The U. N. itself began last week to broadcast the Communist refusal to obey its cease-fire, and to underline the fact that the defense of South Korea is not just an American enterprise, but is backed by virtually the whole non-Soviet world.

Other governments are expected to join in this effort, but officials here know that information and propaganda will not be enough. President Quirino of the Philippines took one effective step to spike Communist guns last week by announcing a long-overdue land reform. The United States can take other effective steps by showing its respect for the free nations of Asia, and by helping and cooperating with them in solving their economic and social problems. In this context, the Senate Appropriations Committee stuck a dagger into America's reputation in Asia by its reported slash of funds for technical assistance under the Point Four program.

The Best Answer

ANOTHER kind of answer to the Communist campaign would be a swift military success that would throw the invaders back to the thirty-eighth parallel. But this, as informed spokesmen have warned, is too much to hope for; the military effort will take weeks, if not months, until General MacArthur's build-up is effective.

In the meantime the non-Soviet world will have to keep its eyes clear and its nerves steady, no matter how loud the screechings of the Soviet propaganda machine.

In Hitler's day a furious propaganda drive was usually the forerunner to armed attack; it was like an artillery barrage, a signal for the demands on the Czechs and Poles that started the war in 1939.

The present Soviet campaign may, of course, be a mask for equally evil designs, but it may also be a smoke-screen to conceal an eventual withdrawal.

For in spite of all its sound and fury, the Kremlin has been careful not to shut the door to a diplomatic retreat. There is no treaty of mutual assistance between the Soviet Union and North Korea. The Russians have refused to intercede publicly with the North Koreans to call off the war, but they can still do so privately if they think it will serve Soviet interests.

After all, retreats are not unknown in Soviet tactics. The best remembered example was the lifting of the Berlin blockade after the West had shown that it was standing firm. If the military tide turns—as it should in time—and if world opinion continues to resist the propaganda drive, Korea may yet be the scene of the most spectacular Soviet retreat of all.

The Gallup Poll

Red China and U. N.

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

WHAT will the Korean war do to the future of the United Nations?

This question is thrown into sharp focus as the U. N. Security Council backs the United States while Russia denounces the Council's action as "illegal." The Soviets complain that the delegate of Nationalist China had "no lawful right" to take part in the voting.

Russia would have a hard time "selling" this idea to the American public.

Even before the Korean crisis, the great majority of Americans questioned in a coast-to-coast survey were against seating Red China on the U. N. Council in place of Nationalist China. The United States Government has never recognized the Communist government of China.

The argument over which of the "two" Chinas should have the seat has virtually paralyzed the work of the U. N., with Russia boycotting all sessions. While there was some discussion of compromising in Russia's favor in order to preserve the U. N., the general mood of the American public was against giving in to Russia on the China issue, judging by the following survey which was completed shortly before the Korean war broke out:

"The Nationalist government of Chiang Kai-shek in China has had a seat on the United Nations Security Council ever since the beginning of the U. N. The new Communist government in China claims that it should have this Council seat since it now governs most of China. Do you think the Communist government of China should or should not be permitted to have the Council seat in place of the Nationalist government?"

The vote:

Should not	58

Former President Herbert Hoover proposed recently that the U. N. be reorganized to leave out Russia and satellite Communist countries. If Russia should pull out of the world organization as a result of U. N. action on Korea, not many Americans would regard it as a great blow to the U. N.

In fact, a good many feel that the U. N. would be a more effective organization if that did happen.

The public's views on this were sounded in a survey as part of a recent series of studies on public opinion appraising American foreign policy. Here is what the vote showed:

"It has been suggested that the United Nations should be reorganized, leaving out Russia and all Communist-dominated countries. Do you think the U. N. would be better able or less able to keep the peace of the world if it did this?"

Less able	39

Our Political Economy

Inflation Looms on Horizon

By Ysabel Rennie

THE EXPLOSION in the Far East has unsettled many of our comfortable assumptions about the future. But one argument it seems to have settled: the threat for the immediate economic future is not deflation, but inflation.

There are a number of reasons for this, practical as well as psychological. When tomorrow threatens scarcities, people tend to buy. This applies to consumers buying houses, cars and other durables, and it applies to businessmen stocking inventories. If nothing else were to supervene, this alone would put an upward pressure on prices, but the effect would be short-lived.

Clearly, however, this is not all. Military action abroad, combined with the awakened realization of threats to our national security, will likely lead to an upward revision of military preparedness. Whether slow or drastic, accelerated armament at today's level of business spells inflation.

Our economy is today straining for peacetime production at near-capacity. In 1940 millions were out of work and many factories were idle. Then there was slack in the system: we could have guns and butter. Today any increased demand for military production will have to come out of the civilian sector, and without appropriate Government measures, this would mean an upward pressure on prices.

Two Kinds of Inflation

THERE are two kinds of inflation, and within the last decade we have seen both of them.

During the war, we had suppressed inflation. This meant that there was excess purchasing power exerting a pressure on prices, but that the pressure was contained by rationing and price controls. As soon as controls were lifted, the inflation became open and showed itself in the postwar spiral of wages and prices.

Yet both types of inflation stemmed from the cause: We paid people for making goods they could not consume, and we did not take enough in taxes or sell enough to them in bonds to mop up all the purchasing power we created.

How was this done? Of the $323 billion which the Treasury raised between mid-1940 and mid-1945, $87 billion came from commercial and Federal Reserve banks. Government securities which are sold to individuals do not increase purchasing power; what the Government spends the individual saves. But securities which are sold to banks create money—conjure it up out of the inkpot, as it were—and by adding to spending power, put an upward pressure on prices.

Prices were held down by OPA controls. The pressure burst forth to some extent in black markets. But on the whole, people could not spend all the money which was being created, so that the overhang of liquid assets at the end of the war spelled inflation as soon as controls were off.

With the end of OPA, prices rose rapidly to their true levels. For unions which could win wage increases, this entailed no sacrifice. But for teachers, civil servants, unorganized workers of all kinds, and above all, for the elderly living on fixed incomes, inflation worked real hardship.

This Is a Guidepost

THIS IS past history, but it should prove a guidepost for the future. Inflation may again be a serious threat. How are we going to meet it?

Let us assume first no general conflict for the present, only a quickened tempo of military preparedness. A demand for strategic materials, such as aluminum, zinc, iron and steel would involve priorities, perhaps eventual price ceilings, and would compete directly with the civilian economy. But controls are politically unpalatable, and things would have to get notably out of hand before Congress would be likely to do anything about them. For that reason a peacetime rearmament program probably would spell open inflation.

Full war mobilization would be more predictable in its effects. The Government would impose immediate controls over materials, prices, wages and profits. There would also be a drastic hike in the tax rate, but chances are it would not be drastic enough to wipe out the inflationary potential. The result would then be a repetition of World War II: suppressed inflation during the war, open inflation afterwards.

Could we fight a war without inflation? Probably we could—if we had the political courage. But experience shows that no government really taxes war out of its people as it goes along. To do so would mean a combination of taxes and perhaps forced savings through compulsory purchase of bonds which would exactly match the physical value of war production. If this were done, black markets would be few, and general price controls unnecessary.

Could we rearm without inflation? Yes, if we would forego the political luxury of deficit spending. After all, inflation means we are not willing to face the cost of what we have to do. In any form, open or suppressed, it distorts the economy and hurts those groups least able to defend themselves. It is a fraud, and in the long run it may not even be the easiest way to fight a war.

'Useless' Metal Is $1300 a Lb.

GALLIUM is a metal which costs $1300 a pound and has no known commercial use.

A disc of it will melt if placed in the palm. It melts at 85 degrees Fahrenheit and stays liquid to to the unusually high temperature of 3500 degrees. While rare, it is always found associated with aluminum, lead and zinc ores.

It is rare and costly because it is difficult to extract from the ores. The Eagle-Picher Co. of Cincinnati has been extracting and accumulating small amounts of it. It is know to produce powerful physiological effects and some of its compounds are poisonous.

Student Carfare Boost Suggested

By Harry N. Stull

THE public probably will accept with reservations the decision of the Public Utilities Commission granting an increase in fare to the Capital Transit Co. The new rate of 15 cents straight fare, with tokens three for 40 cents and weekly passes at $2, was a compromise, which apparently does not please the utility company. The retention of the pass was a victory for the great number who demanded it and forms the basis of the reluctance of the traction officials to accept the commission's decision.

STULL

The question now is whether the expected loss of passengers will be such as to bring about another petition for higher fares, since each increase in fares heretofore has resulted in a decline in patronage. If the expected revenue under the new rates does not produce an adequate return to the company, there will no doubt be another request for an increase, or a reduction in service, or both, and the public reaction to either of these is not likely to bring about better relations between the riders and the company.

The whole matter is full of unknown quantities, and it is further complicated by the fare of 3 cents for school children, which, in these days of higher costs, borders on the ridiculous. This school fare was fixed by act of Congress at a time when the adult fare was 5 cents or six tokens for 25 cents.

Attempts should be made at once to obtain Congressional sanction for a revision of this rate. Up to the present, however, the utility has made no effort to get relief in this direction, but simply contents itself with complaining. It would seem to be the logical first step in a complete overhauling of the transit company's business.

The suggestion of the Federation of Citizens Associations that a public transportation advisory committee be appointed has apparently been ignored by the commission. The one thing that the company and the public agree upon is the undesirability of public ownership of bus and street car lines.

An advisory group might be helpful if those vitally interested in bus and streetcar service here would sit down together and freely discuss the financial condition of the company and attempt to agree upon measures that would be helpful to the company and fair to the public.

THE decision of the citizens' committee to postpone for another year the merger of major fund drives, while disappointing, was probably based on sound reasoning. Time was the determining factor, and the Community Chest requires time to make preliminary plans for its 1950 drive.

While it now appears there never can be a complete 100 percent merger of all organizations into one overall campaign, there nevertheless will be a further effort to consolidate among those willing to go along with the plan.

It appears that Detroit has been successful in solving the problem, and the objection of the public to multiple appeals has been made so manifest that action of some kind seems to be imperative. The citizens' committee must recognize that in all cases the public—the donors of these millions of dollars—should be considered first.

Suburban Trek Noted

THE announcement by the Census Bureau that the population of the District of Columbia is now 792,234 should not cause a great deal of surprise. The movement to the suburbs has been quite obvious for some years.

Though the figures announced were less than some had expected, the increase in population over 1940 is still a healthy and normal one. Statistics from other cities indicate a similar trend throughout the country.

Many of the new homes being built within the District are beyond the means of many potential home owners, while, in the neighboring communities of Maryland and Virginia, homes are being constructed that better fit the pocketbook of many wage earners.

The improved highway system and the millions of automobiles being turned out make it possible for many employed persons in the District to enjoy the benefits of suburban life while commuting to their work. This movement to the adjoining counties brings up many new questions, and it is time that public officials took notice of the fact that the so-called Metropolitan Area is in reality one large city.

Efforts should be made by those in authority to work out some coordinated plan involving the tax question, transportation and public utilities. The attempts by a few organized civic groups, while commendable, are not sufficient to solve these problems. They should be strongly supported by public officials of the different jurisdictions.

Virginia Affairs

More Urban Delegates Urged

By Benjamin Muse

SECTION 43 of the Constitution of Virginia reads as follows:

"The present apportionment of the Commonwealth into senatorial and house districts shall continue; but a reapportionment shall be made in the year nineteen hundred and thirty-two and every ten years thereafter."

MUSE

That means, of course, that "a reapportionment shall be made" in 1952.

A recent Associated Press article reported "speculation over the possibility of a redistricting move for the General Assembly," and said that "a member who declines use of his name" said that there "probably" would be such a move, but added that it would result in "quite a fight."

There is no "possibility" or "probably" about it: a reapportionment of General Assembly districts must be made in 1952. It is important for Virginians to keep that constitutional mandate steadily in mind. It is, perhaps, even more important to get used to the prospect of a very drastic redistricting operation if General Assembly seats are to be reapportioned with a reasonable relationship to the present distribution of the State's population.

The now completed census figure for Virginia's total population is 3,268,786. That is an increase of 22.1 percent over the 1940 figure of 2,677,733, and the increase has been confined mostly to certain small areas. In fact, 40 of Virginia's 100 counties have actually lost population.

Increases in Cities

THE INCREASE has been mainly in the cities and, above all, in the urban counties around Norfolk, Newport News and Washington. Warwick County has more than quadrupled in population. Norfolk County has increased 177 percent and Arlington, 137 percent. The City of Falls Church has increased 192.3 percent, and Fairfax County, in spite of the separation of Falls Church, has grown 139.9 percent to a population of 98,195.

It is evident that the present hodge-podge of General Assembly districts is ludicrously out of line with this new distribution of the State's population. It is evident also that some of the more populous areas are fantastically underrepresented now in the General Assembly.

The most glaring case is that of Fairfax County. (Fairfax, by the way, was shortchanged in Senate representation in 1942.) The combined population of Fairfax County and Falls Church is now 105,722, but together they have only one representative in the House of Delegates.

The adjoining county of Loudoun, with less than one fifth the population (21,165), has the same representation, one delegate. In other words a citizen of Fairfax County, or of Falls Church, has less than one-fifth as much voice in making the laws of the Commonwealth as a citizen of Loudoun County.

The smallest county having one delegate is Dinwiddie, with a population of 18,823, only a little more than one sixth the population of Fairfax County and Falls Church.

3 for Fairfax Urged

THERE ARE 100 seats in the House of Delegates and 40 seats in the State Senate. Calculated on the basis of the new census figures, districts should approximate representation of one senator to 81,719 inhabitants and one delegate to 32,268. Fairfax County now shares one senator with Alexandria, Falls Church and Prince William County, a district which has a total population of 189,719.

Failure to give Fairfax County alone one senator and three delegates in 1952 would be indefensible. Arlington County should also have its delegate quota increased from two to four.

Of course, there will be a fight. The rural districts, with declining population, will fight to retain their disproportionate representation. The fight will be intensified by the circumstance that the Byrd machine has always found its greatest strength in the "courthouse rings" of the rural districts.

Richmond and Norfolk and the urban counties mentioned above, where the greatest population increase has been registered, were carried by the antimachine candidate, Francis Pickens Miller, in last year's gubernatorial primary.

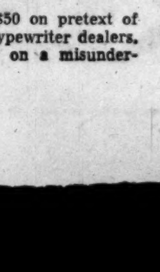
Baltimore Resents 'Cornstalk' Slur

By James P. Connolly

THE reflection cast on Baltimoreans and Baltimore City legislators at the recent convention of the Maryland Bar Association at Atlantic City would have come with better grace from any but a Frederick Countian.



CONNOLLY

Discussing a proposed constitutional convention to consider more representation for Baltimore, a speaker, Benjamin Rosenstock, said: "We have an innate fear, not of the size of Baltimore's representation, but of the quality of legislature men your votes send to Annapolis.

Rosenstock being a Frederick attorney, the Baltimore reaction is: "Look who's talking." In 20 years, three members of the Legislature have been indicted on criminal charges and all three were countians—and fellow Frederick Countians of Rosenstock, at that.

Criticism, like charity, had better begin at home. True, two of the indicted trio were acquitted, a record Baltimore can't match because it has no matching record of accusations.

A Ritchie Favorite

THE first of the accused triumvirate was a banker and State Senator whom almost every one but Mr. Rosenstock, apparently, remembers. His western Maryland bank chain went broke in the boom-and-bust cycle in the twenties and thirties.

In 1931 he was indicted in the District of Columbia and several counties on charges of accepting deposits in one of his banks, knowing it was broke, and aiding in the commission of perjury and conspiracy in connection with the failure of an investment firm whose president was convicted of embezzling one million dollars.

Eventually, all the charges were dropped except one on which he was first convicted and then acquitted. But the trials lasted five years, during which he withdrew from legislative affairs. His collapse was credited with helping defeat the Ritchie regime, in which he was a favorite.

No. 2, a Delegate, also dead now, was indicted in Baltimore and Frederick in 1941, in a grand jury investigation of "shakedown" rumors, on charges of perjury, obstructing justice and taking money under false pretense—or to influence legislation.

It was alleged that he took $50 on pretext of working for repeal of a tax on typewriter dealers. He admitted taking the money on a misunderstanding and telling conflicting stories to the Baltimore grand jury, but said he was "panicky" and was acquitted. The Baltimore grand jury record was not admitted in evidence in Frederick and the judge there said the false pretense charge had not been proved "within reason."

Stolen Goods Case Cited

DEFENDANT No. 3, another Delegate, was arrested and convicted in Baltimore in 1943 on a charge of receiving stolen goods, part of a $30,000 truckload of cigarettes. He was sentenced to two years' imprionment which was suspended on provision that he make restitution.

Against this background, Rosenstock's invidious slur on Baltimoreans and their legislators is of passing interest, except as it reflects an insular and pharasaical attitude that is widespread in the wide open spaces.

It assumes that character and integrity, like cabbages, grow better in the country, but the assumption is false, representing a human frailty. The frailty is that of "kidding" one's self—taking a selfish and practical stand and sublimating it with exalted arguments that have nothing to do with the case.

Many countrymen grant, like Rosenstock, that Baltimore is entitled to more representation. But, again like Rosenstock, they climb on a cornstalk pedestal and holler that the city man can't be trusted, when all they mean is that he can't have his just representation.

The counties have a stranglehold on the heavy balance of power in the Legislature and they mean to hold it, but it is hypocritical to make the stand on moral grounds.

Representation in the Legislature being fixed in the constitution, a constitutional convention is the only way city and county representation can be brought into better balance. The constitution makes it mandatory on the Legislature this year to authorize a referendum on a convention.

A referendum can't be prevented, but a convention can be and has been. Twenty years ago, although a majority of the voters taking part in the referendum approved a convention, the county-controlled Legislature simply failed or refused to call one—and already county spokesmen are arguing against one now.

The least they can do is avoid basing their arguments on angelic superiority. In sectional politics, wings and halos come askew.

This change from "the Soviet to the American style" would not mean abandoning military secrecy about the atom, Lilienthal argues. Reminding readers that Russia has already made and tested an atomic bomb, he says we could apply the same "sensible military secrecy" to the atom as we now have for guided missiles, or bacteriological warfare.

Of course, he adds, the Government should keep tabs on privately owned atomic materials, and reserve the right to take possession of such material at any time, for compensation to be determined later.

A Timely Introduction

A Study of Balladry Over the Centuries

THE BALLAD TREE. By Evelyn Kendrick Wells. Ronald Press Co. 370 pp. Ill. $4.50.

EVELYN WELLS, associate professor of English at Wellesley, has subtitled her book, "A Study of British and American Ballads, Their Folklore, Verse and Music, Together with Sixty Traditional Ballads and Their Tunes."

As the subtitle indicates, the author is concerned with the basic cultural patterns displayed in balladry through the centuries, but what the subtitle does not make clear is that the book also gives a history of the collecting of ballads.

This history may be said to have begun with Joseph Addison's discussion of the ballad "Chevy Chase" in the Spectator at a time when the "rude" ballads were considered unworthy of attention by the cannons of classicism.

Professor Wells recalls that at the start it was not considered improper to "improve" or polish the original folk material. She tells the story of Sir Walter Scott showing his anthology, "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," to James Hogg's mother, who had supplied him with some material.

"There was never ane o' ma songs prentit till ye prentit them yoursel' and ye hae spoilt them a' thegither," she said. "They were made for sining and no for reading, but ye hae broken the charm now and they'll never be sung mair. And the warst thing o' a,' they're nouther right spell'd nor right setten down."

Hogg, who in turn got material for his collection, "The Jacobite Relics of Scotland," from Scott, seems to have had better instincts.

"I have attempted nothing further than the preservation of these old airs in their most naked and primitive style," said Hogg, "well knowing that, should any of them become favorites with the public, it would be an easy matter for any composer, or professional player on the piano, to harmonize them."

Today, folklorists are collecting them in their "primitive style," and on the radio and stage, and in the home, they are being "harmonized" in a revival of balladry not seen since the days of Romanticism.

Professor Well's volume, both history and anthology, is a good introduction to the field.—LEE GROVE.

Koreans getting their first taste of political freedom under the American occupation, at a party convention in Seoul in 1945. Useful Study of Postwar Korea Underlines Lesson for the U. S.

KOREA TODAY. By George M. McCune. Harvard. 372 pp. $5.

WHEN George M. McCune died in 1948, with his book on Korea nine tenths complete, he could not have foreseen its posthumous issue at the very moment the Korean crisis exploded into war.

There is in his survey of Korean affairs since the war a great deal of material foretelling this calamity, however. He wisely foresaw that "the divided occupation made inevitable a test of power."

The whole tenor of the book sponsored by the Institute of Pacific Relations is consistent with the gloomy climax only now reached.

It is most remarkable that McCune's political heirs, in summing up his testament, arrived at some conclusions inconsistent with the logic of the period he reviewed and at variance with events as they did unfold. Those who print history so hot may have the good fortune to produce a timely text as have the publishers of this document. They also run the risk of having prophecy collide head-on with the news.

This is the case in this unfortunate paragraph: "Furthermore, except for recurrent speculation from unofficial sources that the Far East will be the place to watch for new developments in world affairs, there is little to suggest that Korea might be in the vanguard of either rapprochement or further tension in the United States-U. S. S. R. relations. Unless such a material shift of the Far East into a position of uppermost importance for the United States and the Soviet Union should occur, it is not probable that the Korean problem will do more than continue to tag along in the general trend of international developments."

Part of a Problem

EVEN this speculation is not altogether false. Korea is, to be sure, in the "vanguard," but the "Korean problem," for all our present concentration upon it, does not concern us as a "Korean problem," but as a part of a much broader problem, and it is quite true that it is, even in conflict, only "tagging along" in the general trend of international developments.

At this juncture, there is not much to sustain McCune's faint hope that "an improvement in United States-Soviet relations may take place which could probably still produce the unity of Korea. In this connection it is also possible that an improvement in United States-Soviet relations could commence in Korea." This seems naive now.

It would be unfair, however, to seize upon inappropriate paragraphs as though they were representative of the work. This volume is extremely useful to those who now are confronted with the necessity of swiftly acquiring greater familiarity with Korea.

The treatment of the American occupation sometimes seems a little severe. And the analysis of the Soviet occupation occasionally seems a little too inclined to accept as facts unsupported reports.

Still, it takes cognizance of the basic disadvantage of the American authorities. We were trying to get the Koreans to govern themselves (a thing which many nations do not succeed in doing well after generations of effort); while the Russians had the simpler task of forcing upon the Koreans governments and policies imported from Soviet Russia.

The American military authorities might have surmounted even the enormous difficulties inherent in the situation of a people for 40 years under foreign rule if their role had not been complicated by the threatened contest with the Communists. The Korean rightest politicians do not emerge from this account with great credit. The violence that resulted in the assassination of such patriots as Lyuh Woonhyung (July, 1947), was a sad reflection upon the rightists and upon the occupation.

Solid Legal Foundation

IN SPITE of this, the story of the American military occupation up to the departure of American troops June 29, 1949 (almost exactly a year before the North Korean invasion), is a story of honest effort to advance the welfare of the Korean people, inept as the effort may have been administratively on many occasions.

The factual story of the United Nations actions in Korea is valuable at this juncture. It cannot be successfully asserted by the Russians, for all their blatant lies, that the United States at any point failed to pursue a policy in conformity with the actions of the United Nations. This careful obedience to the U. N. laid a solid legal foundation for American action that is of the greatest moral satisfaction and that may yet prove of great material advantage as well.

Appendices of this volume are particularly useful and well devised.

This whole work makes plain that it would have been enormously difficult to put the Koreans solidly on the road to statehood, even in the absence of the hopeless complications of the division of the land at the thirty-eighth parallel. Given that division, the task has been well-nigh impossible.

Our shortcomings, in these circumstances, are understandable. From them we nevertheless must learn to be more effective in other situations of like difficulty. It is evident that we have not yet developed a type of diplomacy and a school of military administration adequate to the role thrust upon us. That seems to be the chief lesson of McCune's book. If Americans take it to heart, the next Asiatic crisis will find us aligned with a native regime more solidly based, more democratically recruited, more completely administered and more adequately prepared to defend itself.

Notes on the Margin

Ernie Pyle 'Life' in Second Printing

By Lee Grove

DUE August 28 is "The Story of Ernie Pyle," by Lee G. (for Graham) Miller, of 2327 15th st. nw., former Washington Daily News and Scripps Howard managing editor, and the publisher of the book, Viking, reports that heavy advance orders from booksellers have already necessitated a second large advance printing.

This will be the third Ernie Pyle book written or compiled by Miller, who was once known as "vice president in charge of Pyle." The others were "Home Country," comprising prewar columns by Pyle, and "An Ernie Pyle Album," pictures.

"The Story," which Miller says will be the last he will do on the late beloved columnist, was originally scheduled for spring publication, but was postponed because McCall's elected to run the current four-part serial version.

Miller, a Seymour, Ind., boy, came to Washington in April, 1923, after a fling at Harvard and Hoosier papers. Pyle, a Dana, Vermillion County, Ind., boy came in May. Already on hand, incidentally, was an Iowa boy, Milton Mackaye, who has collaborated with Gen. Robert L. Eichelberger on "Our Jungle Road to Tokyo"—due September 22 from Viking. It was Miller who introduced Mackaye to the latter's future wife, mystery and magazine writer Dorothy Cameron Disney.

But to get back to the Miller-Pyle story, Lee says he never intended to become an author but drifted into it: "I just knew Ernie so well that it seemed logical."

In addition to his long friendship with Pyle, Miller drew on the knowledge of everyone he thought could help him — Don Whitehead, now with AP here; Mrs. Rosamond Goodman, who gave Pyle secretarial aid, and Robert Sherwood, to name a few. The late Mrs. Pyle (Jerry) let Miller copy all her letters from her husband, whatever the intimacy of them.

Miller has copies or originals of from 500 to 1000 of Pyle's letters, he estimates. The truth of the matter, however, is that he really doesn't really have the vaguest idea, never having counted them.

First reactions to "The Story of Ernie Pyle" have been favorable, Miller says, except for some with an "old fashioned" viewpoint who "thought I should have ignored Ernie's domestic difficulties, but I thought it added a cubit to his stature to know the troubles he had on his back while he was being shot at."

Sawing an elephant's tusks to make them grow thicker . . . an illustration from "Elephant Bill." The operation is performed in a river so the saw can be cooled in the water

An Affectionate Account

Astonishing Beast, the Elephant

By Thomas Schlesinger

ELEPHANT BILL. By Lieut. Col. J. H. Williams. Doubleday. 250 pp. $3.

WITHOUT much reason, people consider the elephant a delightful creature. Their conclusions are generally reached after informal studies of the ponderous and friendly beast at the zoo or circus, with the added flavor of a few apocryphal tales of its memory and intelligence.

"Elephant Bill" Williams gives the reader plenty of solid, factual grounds for continuing this belief. He has written an informal and penetrating study of elephants in general. More specifically, he deals with the habits and accomplishments of those who haul teak in Burma. His research was first-hand. He worked as forest manager of the Bombay Burma Corp. for 22 years.

Many Human Parallels

THERE are three distinct species of elephants, one Asiatic and two African. The Asiatic elephant is the one most frequently seen in zoos and circuses, because it is easily trained. African elephants are rarely broken to work.

Williams deals with the Asiatic elephants. To them he ascribes many human traits. He points out that elephants and men live about as long as one another and come to maturity at much the same ages. It is possible for a child and a calf to grow up together, work together and still be familiar when 60 years have passed.

As it is with people, the mating of elephants is a private affair. Without there being any appearance of "season," two animals become attracted to each other. Days and weeks of courtship may take place. The average female mates between the ages of 17 and 20.

Unlike human reproduction, however, the gestation lasts 22 months, and the female doesn't appear to realize she is pregnant until the end of 10 months.

It Shames the Dog

BY THE time the elephant is 25 years old, a well-trained beast understands 24 words of command, quite apart from the signals of the rider. Not even a really good sheep dog can compare with an elephant in intelligence, the author observes.

Elephants dislike ponies and detest dogs. Williams, however, says that the animals neither fear mice nor have exceptional memories—certainly a shock to elephant lovers.

Williams' story has much astonishing information on the trained elephants, their hauling of tremendous teak logs and their heroic record in the Burma campaign.

In all, it's a captivating, affectionate account of a most remarkable animal.

Superior

Oppenheim Job on the Cold War

THE HIGH PLACE. By Geoffrey Household. Little, Brown. 245 pp. $3.

GEOFFREY HOUSEHOLD, author of "The Third Hour" and "Rogue Male," has fashioned in "The High Place" an ideological E. Phillips Oppenheim tale of superior quality.

Central figure in this novel of international intrigue is Eric Amberson, a bachelor dissatisfied with the bumbling bureaucracy of postwar England. Amberson hies himself off to Syria, where he had seen war service, and settles down as a dealer in farm implements and supplies. Almost before he knows it, he has fallen in love with Elisa Cantemir, a Central European refugee, and has become the agent of Kasr-el-Sittat.

There is more than meets the eye in the rural European colony, Kasr-el-Sittat, and Amberson is a long time in comprehending it. Elisa, who is a member of the colony's oligarchy, reveals something of it, as well as of herself, when she asks, "How can we love at all if we are unwilling to destroy?"

She tells more when, 50 pages later, she discloses that Kasr-el-Sittat is the headquarters of a secret international political party. "All of them, generals, philosophers, even politicians, admit that another war must end in anarchy. They try to terrify the people with their talk of anarchy. They never see that it is preferable to the tryanny of the state." Elisa's party is seeking to do away with government and to substitute a utopian anarchy.

This concept in itself does not especially disturb Amberson. What moves him to action is the revelation that Kasr-el-Sittat's master minds are going to hasten the evolution by provoking war between the two sides of the Iron Curtain.

In fact, they are about to spark the powderkeg by slipping a Mickey Finn'd cigar to a statesman at an international conference. Under the influence of the cigar, the statesman will go on an uncontrollable talking spree that will make international peace no longer possible. (The peculiar ways in which Communists get confessions nowadays make this cigar touch seem not nearly so luridly fictitious as it would have seemed in Oppenheim's day.)

Amberson cannot stomach the thought of millions of people dying in an East-West war, and so he puts a spoke in Elisa's wheel, and in the spirit of Oscar Wilde's pronouncement kills the thing he loves.

In addition to its virtues as entertainment, "The High Place" should be recognized for a phrase embodying one of the clammiest thoughts in recent fiction: "You don't hold a Lenin in your arms."

Authentic Autobiography

'Cowboy's Bible' Given The De Luxe Treatment

A TEXAS COWBOY, or Fifteen Years on the Hurricane Deck of a Spanish Pony. By Charles A. Siringo. William Sloane Associates. 198 pp. Ill. $3.

IT was "the cowboy's Bible when I was growing up," Will Rogers told the author.

The book to which Rogers testified is Charles Angelo Siringo's "A Texas Cowboy," the first authentic autobiography by a cowhand and the second book of any significance relating to the range, according to that connoisseur of Western literature, J. Frank Dobie.

Dobie contributes the scholarly introduction to this edition—illustrated with drawings by Tom Lea—which is strictly de luxe compared with the paperback editions once hawked on trains.

Charlie Siringo, a wide ranging cowboy, was born in Matagorda County, Texas, in 1855, according to Dobie. (According to Siringo, "As near as I can remember," it was in 1856 that "your humble Servant came prancing into this wide and wicked world.") His father was of Italian and his mother of Irish origin, prompting our author to say playfully, "Am I not a queer conglomerate—a sweet-scented mixture indeed!"

Never Gilds Lily

IN his preface to the book, first published in Chicago in 1885, Siringo states with candor, "My excuse for writing this book is money—and lots of it." The curious thing is that, having baldly stated the truth, he does nothing to gild the lily to make it more saleable.

Here was a cowhand of the Old Southwest who knew the Billy the Kid story, a bit of it at first hand; who knew rustlers, steamboats, saloons, frontier towns; who made a solitary horseback ride cross country while so sick with smallpox that he had to bed down on the ground and awaked covered with snow—does he make much of it? He does not. Day in, day out, Charlie Siringo took it all in his matter of fact stride, giving no color, conveying no emotion.

These were the days when Edward Z. C. Judson ("Ned Buntline") and Prentiss Ingraham had gaudily started gaudy Buffalo Bill Cody on his flashy career, and respectable people were beginning to think maybe there was something romantic about the West's equivalent of the Eastern farm hand. But Siringo's narrative does not reflect this romanticizing. There is not even an inordinate amount of bang, bang.

Siringo wrote it as he saw it, in what might be called a primitive prose. Compared to it, the writing of his contemporary and fellow Texan, Andy Adams, in "The Log of a Cowboy," is as smooth as that of Walter Pater.

A True Reflection

SIRINGO saw it as his hard-working, low paid, happy-go-lucky fellow cowboys saw it, and he wrote as they talked. It is no wonder that Siringo's book was like a Bible to them.

They must have looked at it with the same curious interest that they would have in their reflection after a long time away from a mirror. And for the modern reader, "A Texas Cowboy" is like a panoramic painting with the authenticity of a daguerreotype.

Siringo described himself on the frontispiece in the first edition as "an old stove up cow puncher who has spent nearly a life time on the great Western cattle ranges."

This was an exaggeration.

The "stove up cow puncher" of 1885 later was strenuously employed for 22 years by Pinkerton's National Detective Agency, and lived until 1928, dying in Hollywood.

The forthright independence that led him as a mere boy to strike out on his own was later expressed in "Two Evil Isms: Pinkertonism and Anarchism." That is a story, however, only touched on in Dobie's introduction to "A Texas Cowboy," a book that is perhaps even better reading today than when first published.—LEE GROVE.

DOUBLEDAY

The Montana Plan

Dirt-Road Communities Are Given New Horizons

By John Barkham

SMALL TOWN RENAISSANCE. By Richard Waverly Poston. (Harper). 231 pp. $3.

IT WILL be a thousand pities if this little volume is overlooked in the rush of new books from the press, for it has a constructive message for all forward-looking citizens. It is that rare thing—a book that looks at our way of life, shows where it is wanting, and points out concretely how to remedy the lack.

What Mr. Poston has done here is to describe the so-called Montana Plan. Worked out by Ernest O. Melby, chancellor of the University of Montana, the plan was designed to "find ways to enrich the quality of living in Montana." The blueprint provided for a three-year study of the State's rural communities, ascertaining where life was deficient and demonstrating how those deficiencies could be removed.

The experiment began in 1945 in a dirt-road community of 90 families called Lonepine. In no time at all, under the guidance of a team of investigators, the residents were running their own library, conducting a 10-week study course, and staging a historical play. Before the team left, Lonepine's communal pulse was racing as never before. And in three years the team reorganized 14 communities in this way, plus some 50 related projects. In Mr. Poston's words: "This is the kind of planning that will help rural Montana to emerge from her cultural frontiers."

Montana is not alone in its community needs. The United States is dotted with numberless communities that need to be sparked into life this way. The Montana Plan is a notable practical effort in the direction of a constructive program for better community living. Legislators in every State should be made to read it and inaugurate programs of their own. The costs will be small and the dividends high in what the author over-diffidently calls "this modest experiment in education."

Crime of Passion

FOLLOW ME DOWN, by Shelby Foote. (Dial Press.) 271 pp. $3.

AT A GLANCE, this looks like another crime of passion from the South, but a page or two is enough to establish the distinctive quality of Mr. Foote's writing. The crime is there right enough: a middle-aged Mississippi farmer runs off with a young girl and murders her after three weeks together on an island. But what makes this commonplace situation different is the way Mr. Foote handles it.

To begin with, he writes a vivid impressionistic prose that paints a scene as though the reader were watching it. He uses this malleable instrument to tell his story through the mouths of characters ranging from the murderer and his victim to a lawyer, a reporter, a jailer. In each instance the author gets right under the skin of his character in language, imagery and thinking. The net result is a series of widely differing word pictures, all woven together into a single narrative—a virtuoso performance.

If Mr. Foote will curb his urge toward exhibitionism (such as basing the lawyer's jury address on the principles of sonata form, and the over-lavish scattering of four-letter words), he will go a long way. The talent he displays in this book may be flamboyant, but it is undeniably impressive.

Life of Riley

MINK ON WEEKDAYS, by Felicia Lamport. (Houghton Mifflin.) 309 pp. $3.

BY WAY of a change from the log-cabin-to-penthouse saga, this is a frothy account of what it's like to have been born and raised on New York's ritzy upper East Side. Miss Lamport survived the ordeal without apparently inhibiting her natural effervescence in the slightest.

The Lamports were well fixed, and the children knew from an early age what it was to have what they wanted. Their apartment was also full of many things they didn't want, notably the shipload of Near East "art" mother picked up on one of her trips. The kids traveled all over Europe at a tender age, absorbing sights, impressions and culture, while father stayed home and earned the money that made it all possible. They were the kind of family that could plan a vacation either in the Balkans or in China with equal ease, and then, maybe, wind up in Westchester.

Miss Lamport sets it all down gaily and with a determined brightness. Despite some of her puns, this is very much a book for that hammock under the sycamore.

Portrait of Generation

TIME OF HOPE, by C. P. Snow (Macmillan.) 416 pp. $3.50.

DR. SNOW, a Cambridge don turned novelist, has undertaken the massive project of limning the life of his time in a sequence of 10 self-contained novels. Any writer who adopts so gargantuan a canvas is obviously not a man to be hurried or cramped. In this, the second in his 10-tome series, Dr. Snow proceeds at the stately pace of one whose eye is fixed on the far horizon.

"Time of Hope" is the story of Lewis Elliot, who was the narrator in "The Light and the Dark." Here he is seen as a rising young barrister, not altogether an appealing fellow but one of considerable talent. Most of the story revolves round his relationship with Sheila Knight.

Basically, however, this is a novel of people rather than of action, and what movement there is flows logically out of the characters. It is only when the reader gets to the end of the book that he realizes he has absorbed a great deal of subtly conveyed information about England as it was in the 20s.

There is a distinctly intellectual flavor about Dr. Snow's writing, which is perhaps part and parcel of his thoughtful approach. Obviously our author is only just warming up to his task, but at this point it is possible to say: so far, so good.

H. Ray Baker's jacket design for "Rocky Mountain Empire"

In a Nutshell

ROCKY MOUNTAIN EMPIRE. Edited by Elvon L. Howe. Doubleday. $3.

A heart-warming collection of tales about the people of the West, old and new, from the pages of the Rocky Mountain Empire Magazine of the Denver Post. The rip-roaring frontier days are well represented, but the most exciting stories are of today's men and women: the smoke-jumpers, the flying farmers, the men who drive giant semitrailers over the Continental Divide, others who patrol the high-tension cables in the Rockies—these are the true contemporary "Westerns." Two of Fred Gipson's stories, "Last Escape" and "High Lonesome Place," are splendid, sensitive pieces of fiction. The rest of the book is first-rate reporting on the thousand-mile circle of the Rockies' region.

A READING OF MOBY DICK. By M. O. Percival. University of Chicago Press. $2.75.

THE CURRENT revival of interest in "Moby Dick" has been inspired chiefly by the application of the findings of psychiatry to the personality of Herman Melville, the author of the classic about the great white whale. It is interesting that, in the midst of this revival, Professor Percival of Ohio State University has written an interpretation of "Moby Dick" in which he totally ignores its author, and searches out the symbolism of the book as a work of art related to other works of art but independent of its creator. He has come up with a Kierkegaardian view of Captain Ahab and Ishmael, the problem of good and evil and the universe in general.

FOOTSTEPS ON THE STAIR. By Byron Brinig. Rinehart. $3.

A SLYLY humorous novel about the lives of two well-to-do families living in a Montana mining town at the turn of the century. The Joyces are Irish Catholic and the Benjamins are Jewish. They are brought together by the marriage of their children. A grandson, Stephen, holds the loosely woven characters together. More a series of character vignettes than a novel, Mr. Brinig does his job well. He handles his people with sympathy and understanding. A good book for summer reading.

SEPTEMBER TIDE. A play in Three Acts. By Daphne du Maurier. Doubleday. $2.

GERTRUDE Lawrence starred in Miss du Maurier's pleasant little drama when it ran so successfully in London a season ago. The triangle of the play consists of Stella, a lovely, nostalgic widow; Cherry, her brusque "modern" daughter, and Evan Davies, Cherry's husband, an artist who loves both of them. The action takes place in Stella's nautical home on the coast of Cornwall, with a background of the water lapping at high tide and the cries of gulls. As a study in contrasts of two generations of women, with Evan halfway between in age and understanding both, the play is witty, polished and sentimental all at once.

India's Path Like That of U. S. in 1780

INDIA AND THE UNITED STATES, by Lawrence K. Rosinger. Macmillan. 149 pp. $2.75.

IN THIS informative little volume, Lawrence K. Rosinger points out some interesting parallels between the economic and foreign policies of India in 1950 and the United States in the 1780s and 1790s. Then America, like Nehru's India now, was newly independent, searching its way and facing a "complex combination of attractions and dangers" from the outside world.

In the case of India today, the "attractions" are foreign investment and technical aid to speed industrialization—principally from the United States. The "dangers" Indians fear are possible political control accompanying governmental aid from the United States; and foreign business exploitation and excess profit taking by private investors.

These apprehensions about foreign control are obviously grounded in India's long colonial experience. Today such fears are reinforced by considerations of foreign policy. Mr. Rosinger, a well-known writer on Asian problems, finds that the Indian government is trying to steer an independent course, trying to remain a free agent in a polarizing world.

India's desperate necessity to concentrate on its internal problems leads it to stay clear of either a Russian bloc or an American bloc. The author points to "ample evidence" that "for most Asians the main issue is not Moscow versus Washington, or capitalism versus communism, but rather nationalism, a real voice for the people in government and economic progress versus colonialism, despotic government and economic backwardness."

Prime Minister Nehru said many of these things on his visit to the United States last October. His lucid speeches, recently published, will take on an added dimension for the American reader who also explores the background of his thinking in this competent book.

Mr. Rosinger's conclusions and policy recommendations are restrained and cautious; in a very real sense, the facts which he presents about India's problems speak for themselves. In sponsoring this book, the Institute of Pacific Relations has made another splendid contribution to the forming of intelligent public opinion and public policy in the United States.

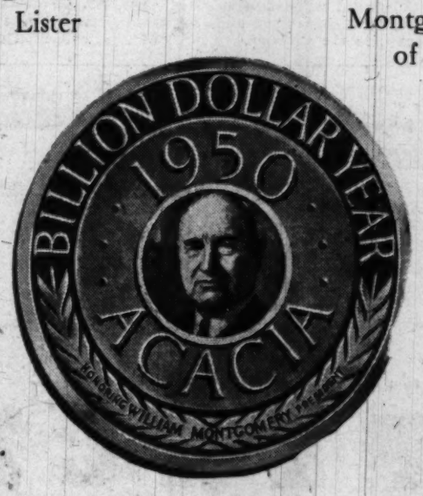
1869: Dr. Lister introduces the use of absorbent gauze for bandages and dressings*

From Men of Vision comes Progress

In 1869, while occupying the chair of clinical medicine at Edinburgh, Scotland, Dr. Joseph Lister first introduced the use of absorbent gauze for bandages and dressings . . . one of the antiseptic techniques pioneered by this great man of the medical world. In mankind's parade of progress toward a healthier life, the courage and vision of such pioneers as Dr. Lister has made possible today's protection from infection.

In 1869, there were two other happenings which, in later years, were to contribute another important kind of Protection to human progress. In Tyrone County, Ireland, was born William Montgomery who was destined to pioneer many beneficial practices now in common use by most life insurance companies. And in the same year, here in Washington, D.C., a small local mutual aid society was chartered by the Congress of the United States.



Although the birth of a boy and the chartering of a little insurance society occurred more than 3,000 miles apart, the futures of both were destined to merge in one great story of accomplishment. For in later years, this small obscure society—about to be liquidated—came under the direction of William Montgomery and through his inspired leadership developed into one of America's great mutual life insurance companies—Acacia.

Today more than 200,000 American families own more than a Billion Dollars of Acacia life insurance protection "tailored" to their personal needs by Acacia's own representatives. These American families mutually share in Acacia's earnings and will continue to share as long as they are policyholders, because through William Montgomery's efforts Acacia's Charter was long ago amended to read, "this Company shall forever be conducted for the mutual benefit of its policyholders and their beneficiaries and not for profit!"

Nats Get Only 3 Hits, Lose to Brissie, 6-0

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

PHILADELPHIA, July 8—Frank Filchock's plea that his suspension be lifted by Commissioner Bert Bell is not based on any desire to return to the National League. He merely wants vindication. His friends maintain Filchock's only crime was his refusal to accept a $2500 bribe offer to "throw" the Giants-Bears game three years ago. He was suspended for not reporting the offer. . . . The 8-0 record of Bob Miller, the Phil's unbeaten rookie pitcher is somewhat tainted. Relief man Jim Konstanty finished all of Miller's last three starts and a couple before that. . . . Yogi Berra's selection as the A. L. all-star team catcher is a triumph for Bill Dickey who patiently taught him to catch and watched him emerge from the clown role . . . .It recalls Berra's comment in spring training two years ago when he declared "Bill Dickey is learning me all his experience" . . . Middleweight Champion Jake LaMotta has dispensed with the managerial services of his brother Joe and is doing all his own business. "I give him a six-month suspension because he wasn't behaving," says Jake bluntly, "and maybe I'll make it a year." . . . The well-believed report in Philadelphia is that the Athletics are already sold, with the announcement to be made at the end of the season.

POVICH

GUSSIE MORAN, whose interesting figure was one of the reasons she was offered $50,000 to turn pro, says she "might consider a more interesting figure." . . . The LaMotta-Mitry fight for the middleweight title in Madison Square Garden next week won't be broadcast or televised in the United States, but the Voice of America has been given permission to beam it to Italy and Trieste, Mitri's home town . . . Casey Stengel hinted that he might not have his contract renewed in 1951 when he talked the other day of his experience with his rookies. "If I don't find out what they can do this season, somebody else might be doing that next spring," he said. . . . If there is a successor to Stengel, the likeliest man is Tommy Henrich, the favorite of Yankee Co-Owned Del Webb. Henrich is rated superior to Joe DiMaggio as managerial timber . . . The Phillies attendance for their first 31 home games is up more than 43 percent, and, for the second time in history they will draw more than one million at home.

BOSTON SOURCES declare that Red Sox players dictated the release of Trainer Eddie Froelich whom they called, significantly, "A Joe McCarthy man." . . . The capable Froelich has already received an offer from another major league club. . . . New York tracks close the daily double betting 20 minutes before post time, to discourage it. Daily double bets tie up money that would otherwise go into the machines on both the first and second races, and the tracks' percentages suffer. . . . The Cleveland Indians would be setting baseball history if they won the pennant with their all-rookie infield. . . . Comic Ken Murray refers to the lively ball as "hare-conditioned." . . . The Orlando, Fla., Chamber of Commerce on July 12 will approve a new $130,000 grandstand for Tinker Field where the Nats train. Construction will start in September . . . National League President Ford Frick has given a hearing to Jackie Robinson's charges that the leagues umpires are baiting him. . . . Television crews in both leagues have their orders not to focus cameras on fans who leap out of their seats and try to get into the act on the ball field. . . . Elmer Singleton, the Nats' rookie pitcher, is the only Mormon in the majors.

COACH STEVE OWEN of the New York Football Giants has proudly shed 75 pounds and denies that he went on a diet. "I just stopped eating," he quipped. . . . Gabe Murphy, Clark Griffith's new 40 percent partner in the Nats, will probably succeed Wooten Young in the $10,000-a-year treasurer's post at the annual stockholders meeting next January. . . . Joe Louis' intimates now declare he'll come back for "one more fight" to square his income tax affairs with Uncle Sam. . . . The Nats have been receiving sensational reports from Chattanooga on the hitting of Fred Taylor, the kid first baseman from Ohio State U., who will be called into the Washington training camp next spring. . . . General Manager Frank Lane of the White Sox reports that his Venezuelan shortstop, Al Carrasquel, has a three word English vocabulary: "Chicago, More Money." . . . Out of Bill Evans' new book, Knotty Problems: "A runner on first starts to steal second and makes it as the batter swings and misses a third strike which hits his shirt. What is the ruling?" The batter is out, and the runner must return to first base. . . . The close pennant races in both leagues are making the pro football owners unhappy, with baseball hogging the sports-page space at a time when they'd like to be calling attention to their games and selling season tickets.

Tigers Bop Tribe, 5-4, on 5-Run 7th; Lead by 4½

Detroit, July 8 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers, handcuffed for six innings by righthander Steve Gromek of the Cleveland Indians, shelled him from the mound in a five-run, five-hit seventh inning to win, 5-4, today and increase their American League lead to four and a half games.

The Indians built an early four-run lead on successive homers by Luke Easter and Larry Doby in the third and by Joe Gordon in the fourth. They added a fourth run in the seventh on a two-base error and Easter's single.

The American League leaders trounced on Gromek in a resounding seventh that saw two doubles, three singles, two walks and an error figure in the scoring.

The big Tiger uprising was enlivened by a multi-sided argument over Kell's game-winning single that scooted along the third-base line with Johnny Lipon scoring the winning run.

Indian Third Baseman Al Rosen protested the ball was foul and had to be restrained by his teammate, Catcher Jim Hegan, as he tried to get at Plate Umpire Ed Hurley.

Masterson Stops Yanks

New York, July 8 (AP).—The Boston Red Sox turned back the New York Yankees, 4-2, today with stocky Vern Stephens supplying the margin of victory with a two-run homer, his eighteenth of the season.

Stephens unloaded in the sixth inning with Ted Williams aboard off All-Star Game Pitcher Vic Raschi. The blow snapped a 2-2 tie and gave Walt Masterson his fourth victory and second at the expense of the Yanks. The former Washington righthander held New York to seven hits.

The Red Soxs jumped Raschi for two runs in the first inning on a single, two walks, a ground out, and an error by Phil Rizzuto, Yankee shortstop, who passed the cigars around before the game in celebration of the birth of his third child.

Masterson held the Yanks to one hit over the first three innings, but wilted a bit in the fourth when the Yanks tied the score on two singles, a walk and double play.

Williams opened the sixth by beating out a dribbler down the third base line. Stephens followed with a belt into the left field seats, the 195th homer of his career, to complete the scoring.

Masterson surrendered two hits in the fifth and then held the Yanks hitless until Rizzuto singled with two out in the ninth. Masterson followed by walking Woodling, his eighth pass of the game, before Cliff Mapes flied to Williams to end the game.

Trentonian Tops World Weight Lift

Trenton, N. J., July 8 (AP).—Twenty-two-year-old Jack Walsh of Trenton bettered a world weight-lifting record last night by raising 4235 pounds on his back.

The load, including iron testing blocks and a 435-pound special platform, was checked officially by Frank Black, New Jersey supervisor of weights and measures. The previous record was set in 1905 at Toledo, Ohio, by Louis Cyr, a 390-pound, 5-foot, 10-inch French Canadian, who lifted 4140 pounds. Walsh weighs 180 pounds and is 5 feet 8 inches tall.

Lou Hurls 1st Shutout In 4 Years Of Pitching

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Philadelphia, July 8.—Lou Brissie, pitching off his war-shattered legs, claimed the Nats for his very own today, gave them a three-hit brush-off and posted the first shut-out of his four-year career in organized baseball.

On behalf of the Athletics, the tireless Brissie was making his tenth appearance in their last 17 games. He delivered a 6-0 victory, although not quite to the cheers of the multitude. Only 1578 saw the game.

Neither in the minors nor in his three seasons with the A's, had Brissie ever before pitched a shut-out. But today he negotiated it in a breeze. None of the Nats could progress beyond second base, only two of them got that far, and one had the assistance of a wild pitch.

Dente, Yost, Michaels Hit

The Nats' batting attack can be summed up rapidly. Sam Dente singled to center in the third, Eddie Yost singled to left in the sixth, Cass Michaels singled to left in the ninth and that's all the Washington hits there were.

The Nats, makers of 18 hits against Philadelphia pitching the night before, were completely cooled off by the hefty left-hander from Ware Shoal, S. C., who still carries shrapnel in his left leg. Ten of their outs were infield pop-ups.

Manager Bucky Harris started Rookie Al Sima, the recently acquired southpaw whose ancestors are from Hungary. Sima's pitching today, however, was from hunger. He lasted only two innings.

Big Jim Pearce did a five-inning relief job in which he allowed two runs, and the A's nudged Rookie Bobby Ross for their final run in his eighth-inning chore. A walk, a wild pitch, a balk and a single were Ross' contributions.

3-Run Second Route Sima

The supposedly dangerous segment of the Nats' batting order—Noren, Vernon, Mele and Ostrowski, were held hitless all day by Brissie. In fact, they hit a total of only two pitches beyond the infield.

The A's won the ball game in the second inning with a three-run onslaught against Sima that commenced with Sam Chapman's two-bagger to center. A walk, a sacrifice and Kermit Walh's two-bagger to left produced two runs. Brissie personally drove in the third with a single to center.

Chapman and Wahl put singles together to make it 4-0 in the third with Pearce pitching, and, in the sixth, Dillinger led off with a single to right, moved to third on Valo's single to right and galloped home when Ostrowski muffed Chapman's fly ball.

The Nats reached base in only three innings, the third when Dente singled and got to second on a wild pitch, the sixth when Yost singled and got to second on a walk, and the ninth when Michaels singled.

IN SHORT . . . All of the Nats' previous three shut-outs this season were by 3-0 scores. They got 'em from Art Houtteman, Bob Lemon and Ned Garver . . . The A's now have won six out of ten games from the Nats.

Brissie was ending a streak of five straight defeats as a starting pitcher . . . the day's biggest cheer in Shibe Park wasn't evoked by anything the A's did. The hero was the scoreboard attendant who posted the Phillies' 4-1 win at Brooklyn . . . Sid Hudson and Bob Kuzava will pitch tomorrow's twin bill here, against Alex Kellner and Dick Fowler . . . The Nats haven't won a double header all year . . . Today's game was notable in one respect: Mickey Harris didn't get into it.

Phillips' Pinch Grand Slam Beats Cards

Pittsburgh, July 8 (AP).—Jack Phillips, a reserve infielder and pitcher, smashed a pinch-hit grand slam homer into the Pirate bullpen in the ninth inning today to give Pittsburgh a dramatic 7-6 edge over the St. Louis Cardinals.

The Cards, knocked out of first place by the Pirates' 9-1 win last night, had a 6-3 lead going into the ninth.

A walk to Wally Westlake and singles by Pete Castiglione and Pinch Hitter Hank Schenz set the stage for Phillips' jackpot homer.

At first no one was sure whether Phillips had a home run. Stan Musial appeared to have snatched the ball in his gloved hand. All runners held up. Then one of the catchers in the Pirate bull pen held up the missing ball. Musial apparently had tipped the ball over the fence.

The win marked the first time since May that the cellar-dwelling Buccos have managed to win two games in a row. A crowd of 15,224 watched the historic event.

Ralph Kiner slapped his 24th home run of the season in the fourth. He is now eight days ahead of his pace last year when he finished the season with 54.

Shotton Names Roberts to Start All-Star Game

Brooklyn, July 8 (AP).—Burt Shotten, pilot of the Brooklyn Dodgers and manager of the National League All-Star Team, said today Robin Roberts, star righthander of the Philadelphia Phillies, will start against the American League in the annual game Tuesday in Chicago. Roberts won 10 of his first 13 decisions.

Highland Ellen Laurel Victor

Highland Ellen, Ralph Kroening's speedy racer, driven by Guy Crippen, marked up his second victory in three starts at Laurel Raceway last night, winning the first division of the $15,000 Laurel Cup Pace over the 1½ miles distance in 3:13.

Little Judy driven by Wilbur Beattie for Owner Ralph Goss, won the second division of the big pace, traveling the long distance in 3:18 1-5.

Highland Ellen returned $4.60 for $2, while Little Judy, also the favorite, came through for a $4.80 for $2 payoff.

In the first division sixth race, Mighty Medium, with Frank Safford in the sulky, finished second and Earle Avery's Major Hal third. Lana Direct, piloted by Dan A. Cameron, placed second in the second division, seevnth race, with Billy Haughton's Navy Hal third.

Trainer-Driver Crippen accepted the historic old cup for Owner Ralph Kroening of Milwaukee, Wis., who didn't see Highland Ellen win. Little Judy is owned by Ralph Goss of Columbia City, Ind., and was driven by Wilbur Beattie.

A crowd of 11,000 witnessed the program. The crowd wagered $342,569 on the night's eight-race program, highest of the meet and second highest in the history of Laurel raceway.

Pinch-Hit Clout

Nicholson's 3-Run Homer, Konstanty's Pitching Win, 4-1

Brooklyn, July 8 (AP).—Big Bill Nicholson and Jim Konstanty, two veterans on Philadelphia's amazing whiz kids, teamed up today to give the Phils a 4-1 victory over the Brooklyn Dodgers and undisputed possession of first place in the National League pennant race.

Nicholson delivered a game-winning three-run pinch-homer with two out in the ninth inning. It marked the second time this season that the 35-year-old Nicholson has beaten the Dodgers with a pinch-homer. He previously performed the feat on July 2 with a two-run blast in the eighth inning to give the Phils a 6-4 victory.

The Phils, who had been tied with St. Louis for the top perch, assumed sole command as the Cards bowed to the last-place Pirates at Pittsburgh, 7-6.

Konstanty, 33-year-old right-handed relief ace, checked the Dodgers on one hit after starter Robin Roberts left for a pinch-hitter in the eighth inning. The appearance was Konstanty's thirty-fifth and the victory his seventh.

Roberts pitched brilliantly during his seven-inning tenure. He allowed only three hits, but one of the blows was a homer by leadoff batter Billy Cox in the first inning.

Phil Manager E. Sawyer countered by lifting Goliat in favor of Nicholson and "Old Swish" came through with a home

Braves Trim Giants, 4-2

Boston, July 8 (AP).—Switch hitter Sam Jethroe banged out three of the Boston Braves' 10 hits, including his ninth homer, as Bob Chipman turned back the New York Giants, 4 to 2, tonight before a 21,885 crowd. Chipman turned in a four-hitter for his fifth win of the season and had a shut-out going until the eighth inning.

Jethroe, swinging right handed against southpaw Dave Koslo, drove his four bagger about half way up the towering scoreboard in left field. It was his third righthanded homer of the campaign and the first such on his home grounds.

During the seventh inning, First Base Umpire Bill Stewart, charged a group of box-seated hecklers but Giants Coach Herman Franks held him off until police ejected the unruly group.

Takes Troubles to Mary Haworth—

Goldie Loses His Pep at the Altar

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

DEAR MARY HAWORTH:

I am a married man, I love my wife and two daughters, but I hate marriages.

How can a guy be married, love his wife and two daughters and hate marriages, you're asking?

It's like this, Miss Haworth. I'm not hating my own marriage, but like poison I'm hating the marriages which boxers wind themselves up in. Please, Miss Haworth, don't go jumping at collusions. This is not as screwy as it sounds. Me, personally, I'm in favor of marriages. After all, I'm married myself, but marriage for boxers, it should never happen.

GOLDIE AHEARN

You see, Miss Haworth, my business is fighters. I usta fight myself, later I managed fighters and now I'm a fight promoter. At least, until yesterday I thought I was a promoter, but now I'm wondering if the beer business ain't better.

All my misery, which shouldn't even happen to the North Koreans, is being caused by Willie Pep. Pep is the featherweight champion of the world, Miss Haworth, one of the greatest fighters, pound for pound, dollar for dollar and fight for fight in boxing annuals.

Pep is supposed to fight for me at Griffith Stadium Monday night. I got a helluva guy for him, Bobby Bell. Wotta a puncher this Bell is! It should be a sensational fight and I'm only charging $5 ringside. Can you imagine, Miss Haworth, only $5 to see a world's champion. So his title ain't at stake, so what, it's still cheap to see a world's champion, no?

Yesterday I got a packed gym at my club, the Liberty Athletic Club, a fine club even if it is on 9th st. I never seen so many people since Yancey Henry usta sing there for me while fighters was training.

Yesterday, maybe a thousand people, maybe a little less, was there to see Willie Pep workout. And at 50c a head, Miss Haworth, that ain't bad, either, but what happens? No Pep. All day we wait—you know in this racket we ain't got no rain checks, it's either Pep or you give 'em back the 50c—but no Pep.

WILLIE PEP

So I call Hartsford, Conn., for Lou Viscusi, Pep's manager, and I demand to know where the fighter is. It's a prepaid call, but whaddya think happens? Viscusi he ain't go no idea neither where his fighter is.

All Viscusi, who's a nice fellow and a man of his words, is got for me is a telegram, from Pep to him. It says, "Getting married today. See you next week."

Here it is 365 days in every year and Pep picks two days before he's supposed to fight for me to get married. What a colossal nerve, like a burglar he's got nerve. Viscusi swears he don't know from nothing, no marriages, no romance, nothing. All he knows, he says, is he's got reservations on the airplane for the fighter to be in my gymnasium Saturday for the workout.

Viscusi is working like a detective, like a bloodhound, trying to

Novice Turnesa's 66 Breaks Record

Ferndale, N. Y., July 8 (AP).—Don't look now, but another of those golfing Turnesas may soon be making headlines.

Eighteen-year-old Joe Turnesa, jr., son of the pro, at Grossinger's today broke the course amateur record with a round of 32, 34—66. The former amateur mark of 67 was set by young Joe's uncle, Willie Turnesa, in 1946.

Joe, 205 pounds, and 6 feet 4 inches tall, never shot better than a 71 before. He said he's going to become a golfer.

With Mickey Vernon at bat, Myatt spreads his hands, palm down. Vernon, with a 2-and-0 count, attempts to hit and run, but grounds out.

I'm a nice guy, I never harmed nobody and I'm willing to do a guy a favor, even a schlemeel like this Pep. I'm waiting until 2 o'clock Monday, when he's supposed to weight in. If by that time, this Pep, this champion, if he ain't here, I sue. I'll ask the court to stop him from fighting in every state in the world and when he fights in New York, which we don't consider a state because it aint's in the National Boxing Association, I'll sue double.

I'll sue first for the money he's cost me already and a second time for the heartburn I'm getting. If you got any suggestions, Miss Haworth, please tell me. If they work, you got two ringside tickets with only the service charge to pay.

Fighters! Marriages! In the beer business it was a pleasure.

N. L. Tries Again Tuesday

American Leaguers Have Won 12 of 16; Took '49 Game, 11-7

By Jan Hartnett

Chicago, July 8 (AP).—The major league All-Stars game will return to Chicago's Comiskey Park Tuesday, the site of the first All-Star classic 17 years ago.

Since the big show has been on the road it has been a fiesta for American League fans, but not much to cheer about for the National League followers. The junior leaguers have won 12 games in 16 tries, including last year's 11-7 inter-league decision at Brooklyn. The American Leaguers won a 2-1 decision at Chicago's Wrigley Field in 1947.

No game was played in 1945. The National League's last win came in 1944.

Casey Stengel, manager of the New York Yankees, and Burt Shotton, Brooklyn pilot, inherited the job of directing the 1950 All-Stars by leading their teams into the World Series last fall. The All-Star test will give Shotton a chance to get even for some of the criticism he took after last year's World Series.

The Nation's grandstand managers—3,167,326 fans—in a 20-day poll named eight starters each for Stengel and Shotton. The managers selected the remainder of their battle lineups, including pitchers, to complete a 25-player squad.

Here's a list of the 16 starting elected players who must play a minimum of three innings unless injury or illness prevents, according to the rules of the game:

AMERICAN

1b, Walter Dropo (Boston).
2b, Bobby Doerr (Boston).
3b, George Kell (Detroit).
SS, Phil Rizzuto (New York).
OF, Ted Williams (Boston).
OF, Walter Evers (Detroit).
OF, Larry Doby (Cleveland).
C, Larry Berra (New York).

NATIONAL

1b, Stan Musial (St. Louis).
2b, Jackie Robinson (Brooklyn).
3b, Willie Jones (Philadelphia).
SS, Marty Marion (St. Louis).
OF, Enos Slaughter (St. Louis).
OF, Ralph Kiner (Pittsburgh).
OF, Hank Sauer (Chicago).
C, Roy Campanella (Brooklyn).

The American League's starters represent four clubs and the National, five. Kell and Williams are the only American League players repeating from those chosen by the fans last year. Musial, Robinson and Kiner were picked by the voters on the 1949 National League opening lineup.

Of the starters picked by Mr. and Mrs. Joe Fan, Kell, the 1949 American League batting champion, wound up as the highest individual vote-getter with 1,132,954 ballots.

No pitcher is permitted to go more than three innings unless the game goes into overtime.

Stengel added eight pitchers and nine reserve players to go with the fans' American League nominees. The lone Comiskey employe on Stengel's list is Pitcher Ray Scarborough, who started the season as a Washington baseball hand. Eight of Stengel's own world champions are on the roster, and Ted Gray of Detroit, are Stengel's left-hand pitching choices to go with six righthanders. They are Vic Raschi and Allie Reynolds also from New York; Art Houtteman of Detroit; Bob Feller and Bob Lemon, of the Indians, and the aforementioned Scarborough.

Alternate players—Infielders, Gerry Coleman and Tom Henrich, New York; Ferris Fain, Philadelphia; Vern Stephens, Boston, and Cass Michaels, Washington.

Outfielders, Dom DiMaggio, Boston, and Joe DiMaggio, New York.

Catchers: Jim Hegan, Cleveland, and Sherman Lollar, St. Louis.

Coaches: William Dickey and Frank Crosetti, New York.

Batting practice catcher: Ray Turner, New York, and Milt Haefner, Chicago.

Batting practice catcher: Ray Berres, Chicago.

Now for Shotton's cast of characters for the glamor game:

From the Chicago roster, Shotton added pitcher Bob Rush and Outfielder Andy Pafko. For Pafko it will be his fourth straight all-star outing, but Sauer and Rush will be making heir debut as National League color-bearers.

Nationals' Shotton Will Try to Avenge Series Criticism

Here's Shotton's firing squad:

Preacher Roe and Don Newcombe, from his own Dodgers; Robin Roberts and Jim Konstanty, Philadelphia; Larry Jansen, New York; Warren Spahn, Boston; Ewell Blackwell, Cincinnati, and Rush. Roe and Spahn are the only southpaws on the staff.

Here's how the American Leaguers piled up their 12-4 edge in previous midsummer classics:

1933—Comiskey Park, Chicago, Americans, 4; Nationals, 2.

1934—Polo Grounds, New York, Amercians, 9; Nationals, 7.

1935—Municipal Stadium, Cleveland, Americans, 4; Nationals, 1.

1936—Braves Field, Boston, Nationals, 4; Americans, 3.

1937—Griffith Stadium, Washington, Americans, 8; Nationals 3.

1938—Crosley Field, Cincinnati, Nationals, 4; Americans, 1.

1939—Yankee Stadium, New York, Americans, 3; Nationals, 1.

1940—Sportsman's Park, St. Louis, Nationals, 4; Americans, 0.

1941—Briggs Stadium, Detroit, Americans, 7; Nationals, 5.

1942—Polo Grounds, New York, Americans, 3; Nationals, 1.

1943—Shibe Park, Philadelphia (night game), Americans, 5; Nationals, 3.

1944—Forbes Field, Pittsburgh (night game), Nationals, 7; Americans, 1.

1945—No game played.

1948—Sportsman's Park, St. Louis, Americans, 5; Nationals, 2.

1949—Ebbets Field, Brooklyn, Americans, 11; Nationals, 7.

Baseball May End Ban on Feb. Training

Cincinnati, July 8 (AP).—The New York Yankees will seek a removal of the March 1 limit for the start of spring training when the major league joint baseball meeting is held in Chicago next week.

Walter Mulbry, secretary of baseball, said the Yankee proposal that the date for starting spring training be left up to the individual clubs will be one of the items on the agenda for the meeting, which will be held in connection with the All-Star major league game.

The Yankee proposal also contains the proviso that, although clubs be allowed to start training when they wish, they may not play any exhibition games until the second Saturday in March.

Mulbry said he did not expect any discussion at the joint meeting of rumors that the St. Louis Browns franchise might be moved or of what he called "the alleged rabbit ball."

He explained that any moving of the Browns franchise was a matter for the American League alone and that the uproar over whether the baseball itself is causing the rash of home runs and big scores is a matter for the playing rules committee.

Temporary Fence Issue

There is a proposal coming up however, that will touch on the home runs situation. The agenda contains a recommendation by the American League that changing the dimensions of a baseball park during the regular season be prohibited. That would ban the putting up or taking down of "home run fences" while a pennant race was in progress.

The Cincinnati Reds, for instance, took down a fence in front of the rightfield bleachers here recently to extend the playing field.

There will be another old familiar problem before the joint meeting, too. That's the Pacific Coast League's request to be exempt from the baseball draft. Mulbry said the Coast loop had asked for and received permission to again appear before the joint session.

A difference of opinion may arise over the proposed changing of one rule. The rule, as now proposed, would require college and high school coaches who are scouts of professional teams to have regular contracts filed with the baseball office. It also would prohibit them from signing any players in their own schools until a year after they have been graduated or have left school.

In New York

Now They're Prosecuting Guys Via TV

NEW YORK, July 8 (AP).—The prosecutor didn't even have to leave home to get evidence against two baseball fans accused of running onto the field during last night's New York-Boston game at Yankee Stadium.

The men were fined $25 each today after Assistant District Attorney Joseph Tiger told the court he saw the episode—via etlevision.

Dodgers Sign Another Roe

BROOKLYN, July 8 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers announced today the signing of right-hand Pitchers Joe Roe and Edward Vaughan Fetzer to contracts with minor league affiliates.

Roe, a 17-year-old 6-footer from Viola, Ark., is a nephew of Preacher Roe, Dodger pitching ace. The youngster, now pitching for Viola's semipro independent town team, will report to Greenwood, Miss., next spring. The Viola team is managed by Dr. Charles E. Roe, the Dodger star's father.

Fetzer, 20, is from Baton Rouge, La. The 6-foot 2-inch hurler will be sent to the Asheville, N. C., team. His brother, John, has been with the Boston Braves organization.

Churchill Horse Bleeds to Death

Newmarket, England, July 8 (AP).—Canyon Kid, a 2-year-old race horse owned by Winston Churchill, broke a blood vessel during an exercise run today and bled to death.

The colt had finished first and second in its only two starts.

Mitri Spars Against His Manager Today

NEW YORK, July 8 (AP).—Tiberio Mitri of Rome, who battles Champion Jake LaMotta in the middleweight title bout Wednesday, will box his manager, Saverio Turiello, in his final workout tomorrow night.

Turiello, a better-than-average welterweight, retired from the ring in 1944.

Today Mitri boxed four rounds with Chief Red Arrow of Tulsa, Okla., concentrating primarily on punches to the head.

G. W. to Play Kentucky in Football in '51

George Washington University yesterday added the University of Kentucky, one of the Southeastern Conference's power teams, on its 1951 football schedule.

The Colonials will play the Wildcats November 17 in Lexington, Ky., a week before their traditional Griffith Stadium game against Georgetown.

Kentucky, coached by Paul (Bear) Bryant, former Maryland mentor, won nine out of eleven games last season, and lost to Santa Clara in the Orange Bowl game in Miami.

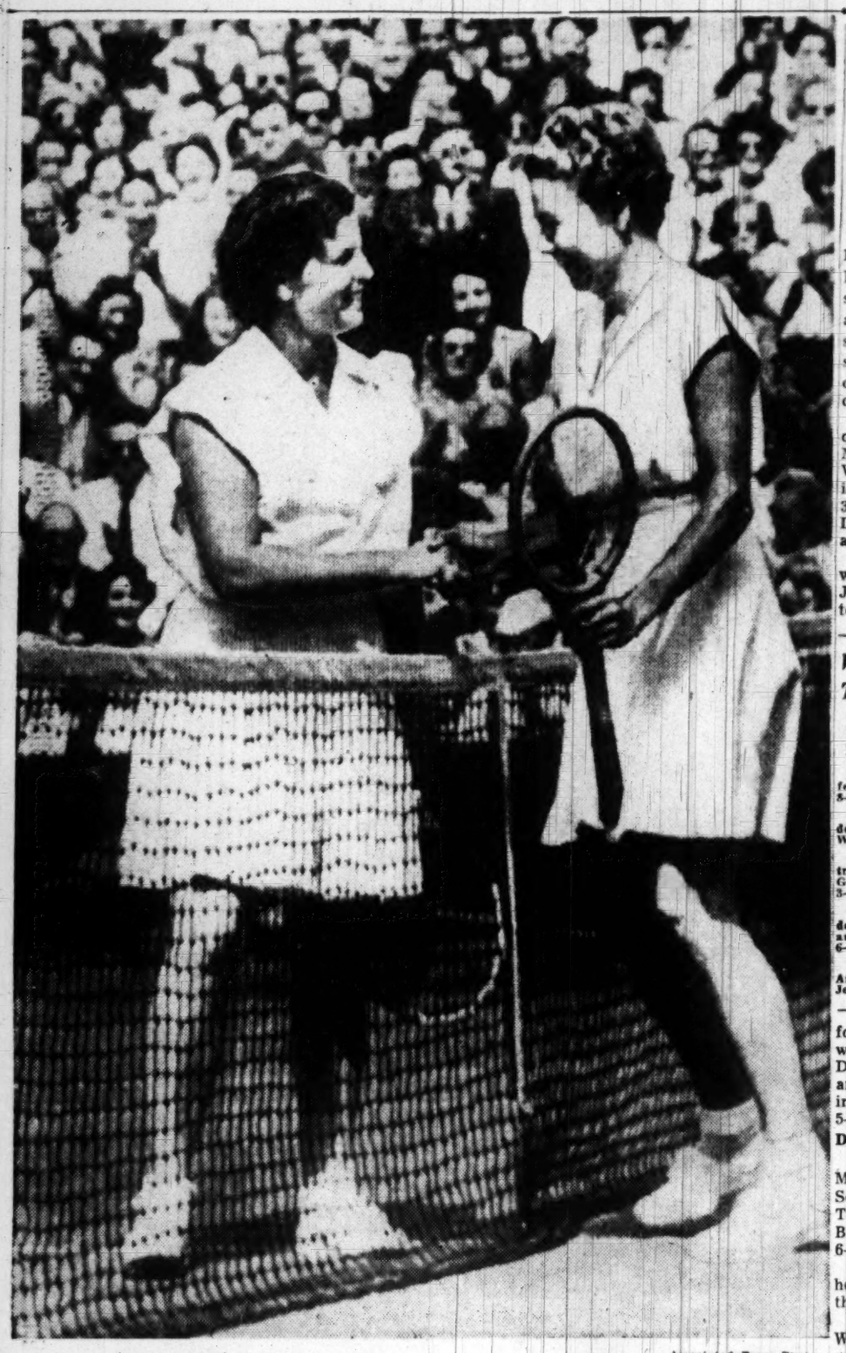
Louise Brough Keeps Singles Title in Wimbledon Sweep



BROUGH'S THIRD IN ROW—Louise Brough (right) of Beverly Hills, Calif., is congratulated at the net by Mrs. Margaret Osborne duPont of Wilmington, Del., after taking the women's singles title at Wimbledon, England, yesterday, 6—1, 3—6, 6—1. Wimbledon, July 8 (AP).—Louise Brough, the blonde from Beverly Hills, Calif., scored a tennis grand slam today when she retained her all-England singles title and shared two other championships before an admiring throng of 20,000 on Wimbledon's ancient center court.

Miss Brough began her all-conquering afternoon by defeating Mrs. Margaret Osborne duPont of Wilmington, Del., in the all-American women's singles final, 6—1, 3—6, 6—1. She had beaten her Delaware rival in the finals a year ago, too.

After a 2½-hour break during which the Australian veterans John Bromwich and Adrian Quist took the men's doubles, she joined forces with Mrs. duPont to win the women's doubles. They downed Doris Hart of Jacksonville, Fla., and Shirley Fry of Akron, Ohio, in another all-U. S. match, 6—4, 5—7, 6—1.

Doubles Up With Sturges

Then following a 30-minute rest, Miss Brough and Eric Sturgess of South Africa defeated Mrs. Pat Todd of La Jolla, Calif., and Geoff Brown of Australia, 11—9, 1—6, 6—4 in the mixed doubles final.

The Californian thus equaled her 1948 feat of winning everything she was eligible for.

Louise virtually has owned Wimbledon since the war. She's gone to the finals in singles four years out of five and won the division the last three. With Mrs. DuPont she's won the doubles four times out of five. With Tom Brown, then Jack Bromwich and now Sturgess she's shared in the mixed doubles crown the same number of times.

Quist, Bromwich Win

In the other title decided today Bromwich and Quist defeated fellow Australians Geoff Brown and Billy Sidwell, 7—5, 3—6, 6—3, 3—6, 6—2, in the long drawn out men's doubles final.

Budge Patty of Los Angeles tucked away the men's singles title yesterday with a decisive victory over Frank Sedgman of Australia.

This gave the Americans 3½ out of a possible 5 titles at Wimbledon.

Win Door Prizes

Chandler Harper Has Party, Entire Family Celebrates

PGA CHAMPION CHANDLER HARPER wasn't the only member of the Harper family to benefit from the celebration Portsmouth, Va., staged for its native son Friday. His sister, Lily Harper, won a set of irons and his broher-in-law, J. N. Howard, won the other door prize, a set of woods, at the testimonial dinner . . . Chandler's brother, Chub Harper, won the booby prize: he got to entertain the press at his home following the affair . . . Brother Chub recalled when Chandler, only 15, decided to stage a golf tournament among his high school friends with Chub's golf clubs as top prize. Chandler saved the day for himself and his brother by winning his own tournament . . . Bo Rowland, George Washington football coach, hasn't been able to beat Jim Tatum's Maryland football teams in two years, but the Colonial mentor won't tolerate this sort of disrespect when and if Naval Reserve officers are recalled to active duty. Bo's a lieutenant commander, Tatum only a lieutenant.

Sergt. Bruce McAllister, the loud-voiced Marine who rends the air at Griffith Stadium, has no admirer in "A Disgusted Baseball Fan," who writes: "I'm sick and tired of having my ears blasted out . . . Can't Clark Griffith have that fellow put in the last row of the bleachers, with a bag on his mouth?" . . . Bill Albans, North Carolina University's temperamental track star, almost bit off more than he could chew several weeks ago when the Tar Heels met Camp Lejeune Marines in track. Albans got into an argument with one of the Marine participants, but soon quieted down when told the fellow was judo champ of the Marine Corps . . . Southern Conference football coaches will gather in Chapel Hill, N. C., August 22 to help sports writers break in North Carolina University's sporty new 18-hole golf course.

If Willie Pep doesn't show up for his fight here Monday night with Bobby Bell, he stands to lose about $30,000. Manager Lou Viscusi has lined up six other non-title matches for the featherweight champion but wonders "whether the other promoters will want him if he ducks the Washington fight" . . . Matchmaker Gabe Menendez, of Turner's Arena, has just returned from a month's vacation in Los Angeles with (1) a new wardrobe, (2) a new suntan and (3) a new love for Washington . . . Roger Keseuth Wolbarst, the former Post sports writer now doing publicity for Dartmouth College, is in town visiting his old haunts and warning all within earshot of the prowess of the 1950 Indians' football team.

Layton Victor At Ft. Dupont

Lou Layton, sr., won the flag tournament held yesterday at Fort Dupont Public Golf Course, finishing 15 feet from the nineteenth cup. Joe Haskins, on the edge of the same green, was second. Bill Eaton was third and Ed Bunge, 100 yards away from the cup, was fourth. The consolation prize went to Lem Groomes.

Brentwood Wins On No Hitter

Danny Byrd pitched a no hit game for Brentwood on his home diamond yesterday against Lakeland to lead his team to its second straight Prince Georges County Boys Club League victory.

Four singles, a walk, a balk and three stolen bases gave Brentwood five runs in the sixth inning to clinch the game.

Stan Bielat Wins Publinx Title, 7 and 5

Louisville, Ky., July 8 (AP).—Stan Bielat, who drives a whisky delivery truck for a Yonkers, N. Y., distributor, won the twenty-fifth annual national public links golf championship today, using a can't-miss putter to bury John Dobro of Chicago, 7 and 5.

The squat, red-faced 37-year-old New Yorker—who says he'd rather be on the selling end of the whisky business and hopes to use his national championship as a selling point to his boss—won his match by a conceded putt on the thirty-first green.

It was a fitting ending to a spectacular putting exhibition by Bielat, who had a dozen one-putt greens for the day, most of them from 20 feet out to 37 feet.

He had a 31-hole medal count of 1 under par for Seneca Club's difficult 6387-yards of tree-lined hills. He used 120 strokes over a distance that carries par of 121.

The deciding hole, No. 13 on the card, is a downhill three-par, 138 yards long. Deep traps are on both sides but it is wide-open in front. Bielat put his tee shot on the green 3 feet from the cup. Dobro was about 50 feet away. His putt was far off beam and he gave up right there, walking over and shaking Bielat's hand.

Seven teams are entered, Fort Belvoir, Fort McNair, Fort Meyer, Army Medical Center, Arlington Hall Station, Vint Hill Farms Station and South Post Fort Meyer. Fort McNair is the defending champion.

A double feature involving June Byers, against Millie Stafford, and Ivan Kamaroff against Ronald Meeker, has been arranged for the weekly wrestling program at Turner's Arena next Wednesday night.

Miss Byers of Houston, Texas, meets Miss Stafford in a special 30-minute battle, while Kamaroff and Meeker clash in a 60-minute time limit contest.

Leith Beats Don Dell for Junior Title

First-seeded Malcolm Leith defeated second-ranked Donald Dell, 6—4, 8—6, to win the boys' division title in the District of Columbia Boys and Junior tennis championships at the Congressional Country Club yesterday.

Dell, an 84-pound, 12-year-old, playing in the 15-years-and-under class finals for the seond straight year, extended his 15-year-old opponent to the lpimit before going down to defeat. Ten of the games were deuced.

Trailin, 1—5, in the first set, the pint-sized loser closed the gap to 4—5, then Leith took the tenth game by breaking Dell's service.

Responding to his own audible commands to "run" and "stop giving away points," Dell came from behind again in the second set to knot the count at 6-all. Leith took the last two games by rushing the net to end the two-hour battle.

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS
Boys singles, finals—Malcolm Leith defeated Donald Dell, 6—4, 8—6.

Willis Leads Hampton Ones At Annapolis

Annapolis, Md., July 8 (AP).—A fair breeze and calm water made for good sailing today as competition got under way in the annual Annapolis Yacht Club regatta.

Trim craft, ranging from little Hamptone One Designs to ocean-going sailing yachts, dotted the mouth of the Severn, where a triangular course of 4½ miles is plotted.

Most of the early competition was for small boats.

Clean Up Recruiting

Coach Says High School Grad Should Sign College Contract

Little Rock, July 8 (AP).—Otis Douglas, the University of Arkansas' pro-minded new football coach, today proposed what in effect would be athletic contracts between colleges and high school graduates.

He said in an interview he probably would offer the idea to the National Collegiate Athletic Association as a means of "taking some of the dirty work" out of the recruiting of athletes.

"I believe we need on a national basis something like the Southeast Conference's grant-in-aid agreements," Douglas said. "When a boy signs an agreement with one Southeastern school, he cannot turn around and go to some other school in that conference and get an athletic scholarship.

"If the NCAA had a ruling like that, once a boy signed a notice that he intended to matriculate at one college the question of where he would play would be settled. He might change his mind and go to some other school, but he wouldn't be eligible to play football there.

"I don't mind an Arkansas high school football star or two going out of the state to college. We're going to get some good boys from other states, too.

"But what I don't like is having a boy announce he's going to one school and turn around and go to another.

"Under a system of agreements, the talent recruiters would leave alone the boys who already had signed.

"It would take some boys longer to decide where they would go to college but maybe that would be good, too."

McNeill, Savitt Gain N. Y. Finals

Forest Hills, N. Y., July 8 (AP).—National indoor champion Don McNeill of New York and Dick Savitt of Orange, N. J., the East's current pace-setter, entered the final round for the New York State tennis championship today at the Seminole Club.

McNeill defeated Seymour Greenberg, Chicago, 5—7, 7—5, 6—2, 6—2 and trimmed Sidney Schwartz, University of Miami, 6—0, 6—3, 6—2.

Topnotch Course's 2d Birthday

Ft. Dupont Haven for Crowded Golfers

By Dave Heller
Post Reporter

MEMO to public links golfers: One of the most frequently heard complaints is the length of time publinx golfers must wait to play on weekends. If you're looking for an uncrowded place to play during the most congested hours, we suggest you try the Ft. Dupont Course in Ft. Dupont Park.

The Southeast course is the area's newest (it celebrates its second birthday with an informal party tomorrow), it yields to no local course in the condition of its greens and its rolling terrain offers a challenge.

Why golf can be the most exasperating game in the world—On the first nine at the sporty Fairfax Country Club layout, Alex Halperin clicked off a 32, three under par. Ah, he had this game whipped; nothing to it. On the back nine he struggled around in 42, six over par. For the round, 74, three over par.

Capers James, retired general, Marine Corps, gets wrist action on a golf shot like a man cracking a bull whip. Last week he had three successive 75s, including one at Fairfax, his best score on that tough course.

One Anacostia foursome recently gave the 345-yard, par-four, eighth hole a beating. Danny Burton started things off with an eagle. His drive traveled the entire distance to the green and he sank his second shot, a 15-foot putt.

Ray Borgens and Buck Freeman both birdied the hole. Bill Swan was the high man with a mere par. Danny modestly rubbed some of the luster off his achievement, a 340-yard plus drive, by remarking that he had a "small gale of a wind" behind him.

He picked a nice time to uncork his super-drive. It was an exhibition match with a gallery of 75 spectators.

Washington area entries have a good chance of wresting the Maryland State Women's crown away from Mary Ann Downey of Baltimore Country Club in the tournament starting tomorrow at Suburban Country Club.

Both finalists in the District championship tournament are entered. The District champ, Mrs. A. B. Bower, of Manor, won the Maryland event in 1946, when it was a 54-hole medal affair. Mrs. Betty Meckley of Kenwood, District runnerup, is a three-time winner of the Free State tourney. She won in 1937-38 and '41.

Incidentally, Betty reports that the Women's Mason-Dixon tournament, held for many years at White Sulphur Springs, West Va., a wartime casualty, is being revived and will be held the week starting August 28.

Columbia Country Club will be the scene of some feverish activity starting Wednesday and continuing over a week. The annual member-guest tournament starts July 12 and runs through next Sunday. On Monday, July 17, the Middle Atlantic PGA holds a pro-am at Columbia, and the Maryland Open starts at Columbia on Tuesday, July 18.

Incidentally, Clarence Dodge of Columbia and Merle Thorpe, jr., of Chevy Chase will be back to defend their title.

Small Fry golfers attending the publinx junior golf clinic at East Potomac will get top-flight instruction Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock when the area's top tournament pro, George Fazio, Woodmont Country Club, will be on hand to give with the instructions. He'll be given a hand by Pro Max Elbin of Burning Tree.

Holly Wright, the NBC newscaster, who describes himself as a tyro golfer, practices almost daily at Fort Dupont for the coming "grudge" golf match between radio men and newsmen engineered by District Linemaster Bill Gold.

The Middle Atlantic Golf Association will hold its annual senior tournament for the Walter McCallum memorial trophy Thursday at Burning Tree Country Club with a field of about 80 expected from the Middle Atlantic area.

Competition will be held in three classes, 55-59, 60-64, and 65 and over. In addition to the McCallum trophy, golfers can compete for the Hinshaw Cup, a low-net handicap affair. A team championship and a putting contest also will be held. Entries close Monday, but post entries will be accepted.

Everybody at East Potomac is excited about the Professional-Congressional tournament to be staged at the publinx course July 26. Manager Tee Gibroski expects about 40 members of the Senate and House to team up with local pros in a novel tourney which will be open to the public without charge.

Frank Emmet, sparkplug of junior golfing activities in this area, has high hopes that one of his proteges might win the USGA's National junior championship this year.

He's particularly elated about the stellar play of 16-year-old Billy Wolfe, the Devitt youngster who won The Washingon Post schoolboy golf tournament.

Frank is also counting heavily on Denny Bolster, Gonzaga star who is the defending Middle Atlantic junior champion; Paul McMahon, another Gonzaga boy who won the Maryland State medal, and Bill Bell, Western High's captain who led his team to the District Interhigh title.

Keep Jinx Alive

Mitri Hopes To Cut Jake's Reign Short

New York, July 8 (AP).—Italy's Tiberio Mitri is hoping that the jinx hovering over middleweight champions will strike once again on Wednesday night.

That's the night the handsome, undefeated Italian gladiator meets middleweight champion Jake LaMotta in a 15 round title bout in Madison Square Garden.

The middleweight division is noted for the short reign of its king and the last three rulers hardly got a chance to throw their weight around.

Rocky Graziano, Tony Zale, the second time around, and ill-fated Marcel Cerdan all lost their titles in first defenses.

LaMotta won his crown from Cerdan in Detroit, June 16, 1949. Will he be the next to go?

Jake 5-8½ Favorite

The bookmakers don't think so. They've made the Bronx Bull a 5 to 8½ favorite to win. The price dipped from the original 1 to 2½ odds set when the match was first made as a substitute for the Rocky Graziano-LaMotta match. Graziano was forced out by a broken thumb.

Mitri has won plenty of backers since he started working at Greenwood Lake. He is a virtual unknown here and won his way into a title match on the strength of his victories over such European worthies as Laurent Dauthuille Dick Turpin and Cyrille Delannoit. Daauthuille holds a decision over LaMotta and Delannoit split in two bouts with Cerdan.

Mitri, who will be 24 the day of the fight, impressed the experts in his American debut against Dick Wagner. He gave the veteran trailhorse a good drubbing in the Garden, May 19. In five years of boxing he has won 49 fights and has drawn in three.

The bout will not be televised nor broadcast.

Redskins Swap Soboleski for Detroit Tackle

The Washington Redskins yesterday sent Guard Joe Soboleski, former Michigan star, to the Detroit Lions for another former Wolverine, Tackle George Hekkers, in a straight player trade.

Hekkers completed his third season with the Lions last fall. A star on Michigan's 1947 and 1948 Western Conference championship teams, Soboleski was hampered by injuries during much of last year with Washington.

Mexico Leads Cuba in Tennis

Havana, July 8 (AP).—Mexico's Davis Cup tennis players today got away to a 2-0 lead over Cuba's netmen in their best three-of-five series of the North American zone competition.

Anselmo Puente, Mexico's No. 6 player, won the first of the two singles matches over Cuba's ace, Juan Weiss, 5—7, 7—5, 1—6, 6—1, 7—5. In the other match, Gustavo Palafox, the top Mexican racquet wielder, defeated Cuban veteran Jose Aguero, 1—6, 6—2, 6—1, 6—3.

A victory in tomorrow's doubles match can clinch the series for the favored Mexicans.

Grays Play Cubans Twin Bill

Because the Cleveland Buckeyes are unable to report here for a three-game baseball doubleheader originally scheduled for Griffith Stadium today, Washington's Homestead Grays have agreed to meet the New York Cubans in both ends of the twin bill starting at 2 p. m.

The Cleveland team informed the Grays' management late yesterday that it was necessary to postpone its appearance locally.

The Grays have won 50 games while losing but 13 as an associate member of the Negro American League this season, and will be granted a franchise in this circuit next year.

Archmere Finishes 2d In Feature

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Charles Town W. Va., July 8.—Joe Mandell, who failed to reach the winner's circle in 15 starts last year, came through with a stretch drive today that carried him to his third victory of 1950.

The son of Pass Out took the American Legion purse and checked off Charles Town along with Delaware Park and Pimlico as scenes of his current season successes.

Joe Mandell, handled capably as usual by Jockey Johnny Regalbuto, got home two and one half lengths in advance of C. A. Carlino's Archmere. Two and a half lengths farther back came E. A. Nicodemus' Wayfern to be third in the field of eight.

5th Favorite to Win

The fifth favorite to win on the weekend card, Joe Mandell paid $3.60 to his legion of backers in a crowd of 6000 which bet upwards of $300,000 for the best single day effort of the present session.

The winner was clocked in 1:28 for the about 7 furlongs.

Archmere, recent front running winner here, took command early by shaking off Gay Beauty. The gelding drew out to what appeared to be a comfortable lead until Joe Mandell swung into serious action on the backstretch.

Joe Mandell gradually wore down his rival, took the lead inside the sixteenth pole and was drawing out at the end. Wayfern, sluggish early, was the only other member of the field who was not tiring at the close. The filly came with a game rush through the straightaway.

Saints Rest Wins Secondary

The John Finley Purse, the day's secondary feature, went to R. N. Boerner's Saints Rest, the afternoon's sixth winning public choice. Sammy Palumbo, riding his second winner, booted the 4-year-old in to the wire a length and a quarter in front of M. R. Gribble's Good Service with Ken Wheeler's Bullhead third.

Saints Rest paid $5.20. The favorite parade started with a $15 pay-off on the daily double combination of 9 and 10. A. C. Stokes' Fenland won the opener at $5 under Lee Harris' handling. Palumbo took the second event with Mrs. J. M. Carver's Chal-Glass at $4.

Palumbo stopped the favorite in the eighth race and rode his third winner, his second "triple" in two days. He pushed Mrs. L. E. Everhard's Reminisce to the wire two lengths in front of choice, W. F. Parks' Dawndale.

Tuesday Racing Starts at Lanham

For the first time since the opening of the course, Lanham Speedway will feature biweekly racing starting Tuesday night when the Penn-Mar Racing organization of Rising Sun, Md., introduces stock car racing with machines which have not added racing parts.

Modified stock racing will continue on a regular schedule, entering its eighth week next Friday. Business Manager Al Smith announced that the circuit's five leading point scorers will race Tuesday night. They include Sleepy Snyder, George Gough, Everett Adams, and Walter Ragen, of Rising Sun, and Frank Clapsaddle of Wayne, Pa.

Ballston Boys Win Two More

The Ballston Indians picked up another pair of baseball games yesterday on their home ground as the 12 and under team beat Dun Loring, 6-2, and the unlimited team defeated Randall Motors, 9-3.

Jack Fogerty, currently being eyed by scouts from several big league teams, distributed five hits to win his game against Randall. Tom Darr added a pair of homers. The double victories raised Ballston's over-all record to 104 wins out of 125 games.

Something's Fishy: In Spring, Young Shad's Fancy Didn't Turn to Thoughts of Love

By Ralph Murdock

IT IS RUMORED that the shad laid down a little on their work at Maryland's Fish Hatcheries during the 1950 spring season.

Murdock

They produced only 18,628,000 young 'uns which, according to the State Department of Research and Education, was slightly less than last year's output.

How come?

Nevertheless, the department's disappointment was balanced by the fact that the number of shad fry available for distribution was higher than the annual average for the past decade. The young shad were released in five major river systems as follows: Susquehanna, 4,162,000; Potomac, 4,743,000; Patuxent, 4,162,000; Choptank, 2,944,000.

WHILE ON the subject of conservation, we recently had the pleasure of spending 1½ days aboard one of Maryland's patrol boats which so ably enforces the laws of the Maryland Tidewater Fisheries Commission.

This enforcement body is led by Monk Foster and has supervision over the taking of oysters and crabs from Maryland waters.

In addition to being exceptionally fast, these boats are equipped with a radio communication system which is a sure bet to apprehend law violators in a jiffy.

Let's meet the crew: The skipper is Captain Joe Davis who has been with the service 13 years. Captain Louis Bloom, in charge of communications for Maryland, Lieut. Martin Punckie and Sergt. A. E. Burke. Captain Bloom has spent 26 years with the Tidewater outfit while Punckie and Burke have each seen 12 years of action.

GUESTS WERE Herb Goodman, Remington Rand executive, Harry Livingston, chief disbursing officer of the House of Representatives, and yours truly. Part of the trip was a tour through George Harrison's plant at Tilghman's Island where crabs, oysters and fish are prepared for Eastern markets.

As we entered, we saw the crabbers turning in their catches in barrels. Before we left, we saw the same crabs picked and boxed for shipment. In other words, a healthy crab can become a crab cake in a couple of hours at Tilghman's Island.

Between 2,000 and 2,500 pounds of crab meat is just one day's handle at this modern plant. Believe it or not, a single worker has picked as much as 100 pounds of crab meat in one day—when the crabs are running heavy.

The packers receive fifteen cents per pound for their efforts. It's a good trick if you can do it.

BACK TO FISHING: We caught 25 hardheads and one nice rockfish the other evening. (None under or over the legal limit—believe me.) The second evening produced only 13 hardheads. It was a wonderful trip.

Jim Brebner, his wife Mary, and Susan, their four-year-old daughter, after several unsuccessful efforts, caught their first mess of fish for the 1950 season—a bucket of big white perch. They were aboard the "Joyce II," which is owned by Joyce Le Sage. The catch was made off can buoy No. 27.

Harvard, Kent Win Henley Cups

Henley-on-Thames, England, July 8 (AP).—Harvard and Kent School of Connecticut helped denude Great Britain of a bundle of fancy hardware by winning the senior and junior crew races in today's Royal Henley Regatta.

Two other championships went to Denmark and one to Belgium, leaving Britain only five titles in the ten-event river carnival.

Harvard maintained its spotless record of never having been beaten in the three times it has crossed the Atlantic for the century-old regatta.

Crimson crews carried home the Grand Challenge Cup previously in 1914 and 1939. Both times they kept the huge silver mug five years during wartime blackouts.

Harvard Wins Socially

It was a Holland-American final in the Grand Cup, with Harvard a length and quarter in front of the Njord Rowing Club crew of Leiden University.

A brisk head wind blew straight down the one-mile 550-yard upstream course and the times were poor all day. The American boat finished in 7:23—39 seconds slower than the record set last year by a British crew.

Stroked by Louis McCagg of Boston, Harvard kept just in front of the Dutch boat all the way and then spurted on the home stretch to win going away.

Kent's victory in the Thames Challenge Cup was its fourth since the Kent Preparatory School first won it in 1933. It was the second time American crews had cleaned up in both the Grand and Thames events. Harvard and Tabor Academy did the trick in 1939.

Kent's triumph was at the expense of the Thames Rowing Club. The Connecticut school churned up the river in front all the way. Stroked by Jimmy Thompson of Brookville, N. Y., the winner crossed the finish line two and one half lengths ahead. Kent's time was 7:34.

NOW DON'T GET DIZZY—This picture makes you a little dizzy just from looking at it, but not dizzier than tennis fans become trying to keep up with the ball as it is batted back and forth across the net. Earl Cochell Goes Into Action Today

By Gordon Beard

Fourth-ranking Mrs. Willie Herbert won a 6—1, 6—1 decision over Janeth Lloyd as the Middle Atlantic Sectional Tennis Championships opened at the Kenwood Golf and Country Club yesterday.

All other seeded men and women, most of whom were completing tournaments at various points in the country, drew first-round byes.

Five of the eight seeded men will play today, however, including first-ranked Earl Cochell, who will meet John Curtiss at 3 p. m.

Mrs. Herbert will battle Rhoda Thompson, 6—0, 6—0 victor yesterday over Cici Carusi, at 1 p. m., in the only match involving a seeded woman.

The feature match of yesterday's 51-game card involved Lieut. (jg) Charles Anderson and Washington's Orme Wilson, with Anderson emerging a 6—4, 6—3 winner.

TODAY'S SEEDED SCHEDULE
(Ranking in parenthesis)

1 p. m.—Willie Herbert (4) vs. Rhoda Thompson.

2 p. m.—Hugh Stewart (4) vs. Alan McCarroll; Arnold Saul (5) vs. Mark Haller.

3 p. m.—Earl Cochell (1) vs. John Curtiss.

4 p. m.—Ricardo Balbiers (3) vs. Alphonso Smith; Gil Shea (8) vs. Frank Arrington.

Anderson, a former University of Southern California netman from Santa Anna, Calif., and now a member of the Navy Leech Cup team, played a typical West Coast "big" game of hard services and net rushing to down Wilson, a Harvard graduate, who is ranked 27th in the Middle Atlantic area.

A three-game streak, which broke a 2-2 tie, all but gave Anderson the opening set. Wilson went ahead, 3-1, in the second, but Anderson rallied to take the final five games with the loss of only six points.

Wilson had considerable difficulty returning the high bounce of Anderson's American twist service, allowing the winner to smash passing shots barely over the net.

Tim Coss, the District's junior champion, won his first match over Ben Rathbun, 6-2, 6-2, while Ted Rogers, Landon Prep's runner-up in the recent national interscholastics, defeated Russ Cooley, 6-4, 3-6, 6-3.

Magda Rurac Beats Jahn, Gains Finals

Cincinnati, July 8 (AP).—Mrs. Magda Rurac, the defending champion, and Beverly Baker, both of Los Angeles, today reached the finals of the women's singles in the fifty-first annual Tri-State Tennis Tournament.

Mrs. Rurac, seeded first in the tournament, won the last eight games in a row as she eliminated 17-year-old Laura Lou Jahn of Clearwater, Fla., 6—2, 6—0.

Miss Baker, seeded second, had an even easier time as she romped over Peggy Eby of Houston, Tex., 6—0, 6—1. Miss Baker ran off a string of 11 straight games before Miss Eby finally won her only game of the match.

The finals will be played tomorrow. Miss Rurac will next play in the Middle Atlantic Tennis tournament, now in progress in Washington, D. C.

Bill Benning Says:

AT CHARLESTOWN

DEAR FOLKS:

Starter Harold Holland is doing his usual bangup job here. He's a New Orleans boy. Jockey Sammy Palumbo is getting more cheers than boos of late, which is real news. Palumbo, like Tennyson's brook, rolls on and on and seldom has shown any better form than at present. Gene Dosher seems to have jumped the gap from apprentice to journeyman jockey. He is getting plenty of mounts even if they are not short-shot prices.

Jockey Woody Kirk is in action here. Last summer he was missing for a couple of weeks. Asked where he had been, Kirk replied, "I went back to the farm to do the plowing". Leeds Riely's Crystal Pass which went amiss after winning at Delaware Park is here and on the road to recovery. See you on the rail.—Bill

AEC Aiming At Self Rule For 3 Towns

The Atomic Energy Commission announced yesterday the first move toward pulling the Federal Government out of the municipal affairs of Oak Ridge, Tenn., Hanford, Wash., and Los Alamos, N. Mex.

The agency said Dallas Attorney Richard G. Scurry will head a special panel which will "study the problems of introducing private ownership of real property and self-government" in the three atomic communities.

The commission's major plants and laboratories are in these three sites on land owned by the Government. At present most municipal services for the 64,000 atomic workers in the communities are paid for by the Federal Treasury. The cost in the coming 12 months is expected to be $7,500,000.

"The commission hopes to find a way, if possible, to dispose of the property in the towns to private ownership, place the communities on a self-governing basis and end subsidy from the public treasury.

"However, it is recognized on the basis of the commission's experience over the past three years that there are formidable problems to be solved before this can be accomplished.

"For the Government to attempt to pull out of the business of community operation hastily might jeopardize the whole atomic energy program by producing chaotic communities during the period of transformation."

It will be the panel's job to recommend ways of making the change without producing such conditions. The group will consist of men "qualified in real estate management and municipal government," the commission said.

N. Y. Census Lists 7,841,610, Gain of 5%

New York, July 8 (AP).—Preliminary census figures released today gave the population of New York City as 7,841,610, a 5.1 percent increase over the 1940 total of 7,454,995.

The figures gave a population count of 15,540,697 for the New York metropolitan area, which comprises nine counties in New York and eight in New Jersey.

Manhattan's population was given as 1,938,551 or 2.6 percent more than the 1940 total of 1,889,924.

The 1950 total for Brooklyn was 2,720,238 or .8 percent more than the 2,698,285 of 10 years ago.

Married in 1898, Divorced in 1910, Couple Try Again

Everett, Mass., July 8 (U.P.)—Walter F. Simpson, 76, and Mrs. Ada Simpson Whiteemore, 72, childhood sweethearts who were married 52 years ago and divorced 40 years ago, were married again tonight.

"I think it's grand," said Mrs. Whittemore. "Although we got divorced and married other people, we always kept a warm spot in our hearts for each other."

The couple grew up together in Chelsea and was married in 1898. Twelve years later they were divorced and both took other mates.

Mrs. Whittemore's husband died in 1943 and Simpson's wife died last December.

Mrs. Whittemore sent a card of sympathy to her former husband and they began writing to each other, then seeing each other again.

Tydings to Seek Return to Senate; No Foe in Sight

Havre De Grace, Md., July 8 (AP).—Senator Tydings (D., Md.), who has been in the Senate since 1926, today announced his candidacy for reelection.

His renomination in the Democratic primary in September seems assured. No opponent has arisen so far.

Tydings is chairman of the powerful Senate Armed Forces Committee. He also heads a Senate subcommittee that investigated charges by Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.) of Communist infiltration in the State Department.

He made the announcement in a speech to a State party rally at his estate on the Susquehanna River here.

100,000 Men, Year Needed to Win, Ex-MG Man Says

Detroit, July 7 (AP).—An Air Force Reserve colonel just returned from four years in Korea predicted today the United States would need 100,000 men and a full year to win the hostilities there.

The main reason, said Lieut. Col. Thomas MacClure, is that "the South Koreans hate us—they hate most white men."

Colonel MacClure, who has been a member of the U. S. Military Government in Korea, told newsmen it is necessary to have lived in the country to "realize what a tough, costly and gigantic task lies ahead of us."

"Our biggest danger will be sabotage and ambuscade," he said. "The South Koreans will work in the rice paddies during the day just as peaceful as you please. "But at night they'll form into gangs of marauders, crippling equipment and killing every American they can."

Squirrel Drops in And Swanky Hotel Has Bad 2 Hours

New York, July 8 (AP).—A brash brown squirrel invaded the fashionable Sherry-Netherlands Hotel today, and kept the main lobby in a turmoil for more than two hours.

The melee sent one man to a hospital with a cut lip.

The squirrel, apparently from nearby Central Park, withstood the efforts of a platoon of bellboys, porters, clerks and housekeepers to oust him. It took an animal expert to do the job.

A cigar counter clerk tried to coax the squirrel into captivity with salted peanuts. Scorning the peanuts, the squirrel jumped to the man's shoulder, knocking off his glasses and scratching his lip.

"FLINT HILL"
Gentleman's Estate
in Historic Fairfax
County, Virginia
Situated at an elevation of 420 feet on 20 fertile acres of pasturage with additional acreage available, this charming brick plantation-type Colonial home, painted in a soft cream shade with white two-storied Southern columned portico is flanked by two wings connected by inclosed arcades and has an overall length of 120 feet. Of center hall plan, there are 5 bedrooms, 4½ baths, with a 12-mile view from the east porch. It is within 15 miles of downtown Washington over the fast four-lane Lee boulevard. It is on local bus transportation and near Trailways and Greyhound express stops. A new elementary school is within walking distance and school buses for the public high school, a mile-and-a-half away pass the gate. There are two country clubs with excellent golf courses within several miles of the estate. The surrounding countryside lends itself to horseback riding either with the Fairfax Hunt or in the numerous Virginia and Maryland horse shows. The pasturage is completely fenced and cross fenced with a white board paddock fence and is watered by springs forming part of the headwaters of Accotink Creek. There is a four-box stall barn with running water and electricity and a six-room tenant house with heat and bath. The bricks used in the 14-inch solid walls, the hand-hewn beams of the 4000-book capacity library, the graceful stairway in the wide 12-ft. center hall and the delicate mantels all came from a 135-year-old tavern in the historic town of Fairfax, Va. WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JULY 9, 1950

By Harry Goodwin—The Washington Post

MILES of beautiful wooded bridle paths may lure some folks to expensive mountain resorts, but all the Williams youngsters need is a 50-yard canter on Lunch Meat, favorite mount at the Bar None Ranch on the Mount Vernon hwy. So he's not an Arab steed! Bonnie and Chris aren't Arabs

By Harry Rohland—The Washington Post

TERRACES of Fairlington are as full of sun bathers as the sands of Cape Cod these blazing summer days. And front-yard sun bathers are much closer to their ice boxes and cool lemonades. Mrs. James T. Williams 2d, in the foreground, has learned how to have a home vacation all summer long

IF YOU'RE in a hurry, there's nothing like a Constellation or a DC-4, but the Williams family, right, is just looking for a Sunday outing. The Washington-Virginia Airport near where they live has special family rates for sight-seeing flights

By Harry Rohland—The Washington Post

9 The Grass Is Just as Green at Home

By Norma Lanum

OME folks have all the luck. They take trips to Banff , Lake Placid . . . Yellowne . . . When they want to l off they climb an Alp. hen they want to swim they into the icy surf off Maine. es, some folks have all the k. But they don't have all fun. Take a look at James Williams, 2d, and family. n, a government attorney, wife Vickie and their two le girls, Bonnie and Chris, will spend the summer—or at least most of it—at home.

Home for them is Fairlington. Not much of a summer resort, you say? Not even a backyard to call their own? That's where you're wrong. All of Washington and Northern Virginia is their backyard, and they know how to enjoy it.

Every Sunday's another vacation for the Williams. One week it's the Virginia mountains. One week the zoo. Another Sunday an all-day picnic, or maybe even a sight-seeing airplane flight over the Capital city for the whole family.

AS SOON as Bonnie, 6, and her 4-year-old sister, Chris, wake up Sunday morning they bounce into their parents' room. "Where do we go today? What are we going to do?"

Chances are Mrs. Williams fried a chicken the afternoon before and has it wrapped in aluminum paper ready to go, along with a salad, and cup cakes and a thermos of grape punch. Just try to buy food like Vickie cooks at a summer lodge!

Some Sundays, when they don't want to drive far, the Williams take a quick spin to the picnic grounds along the Mount Vernon hwy. They spend the whole day right there. The "Bar None Ranch" a few paces up the road has two saddle ponies for the kids to ride and there's plenty of space for playing ball and sun bathing.

Or there might be an extra special treat in store for the girls one Sunday. A sight-seeing plane cruise around the Capital, for instance. The Washington-Virginia airport near Fairlington has special sightseeing rates for the whole famliy. For variety there are driving ranges, miniature golf courses, tennis courts and swimming pools nearby.

GIVEN their choice of things to do on a summer Sunday the Williams youngsters usually call for an all-day trip to the mountains. And, since they have a pretty strong voice in family decisions, Virginia's Blue Ridge is a favorite playland for the Williamses.

Jim and Vickie have found a camping spot not too far from Winchester that the girls love. A shallow icy brook runs close by, so Bonnie and Chris can wade and splash to their hearts' content while Mom and Dad sit down and relax in the cool shade of the pines.

Nothing like camping at Yosemite, mind you. No bears or mooses around to crash the party.

THROUGH the week our backyard vacationers also enjoy themselves, in spite of the heat. Mrs. Williams has discovered that an icebox full of lemonade is as refreshing as an ocean dip. Well, almost!

Sunning on the seashore is nice, too. But just remember, there's as much privacy on the terraces of Fairlington as the sands of Cape Cod, these days.

What about the thrill of the surf, you ask? Well, there's always the garden hose. Fresh water, too. Doesn't taste salty if you get some in your mouth as the laughing Williams children invariably do.

The girls get daily sprinklings in the front yard from the hose Mom and Dad bought just for them. Helps the grass, too.

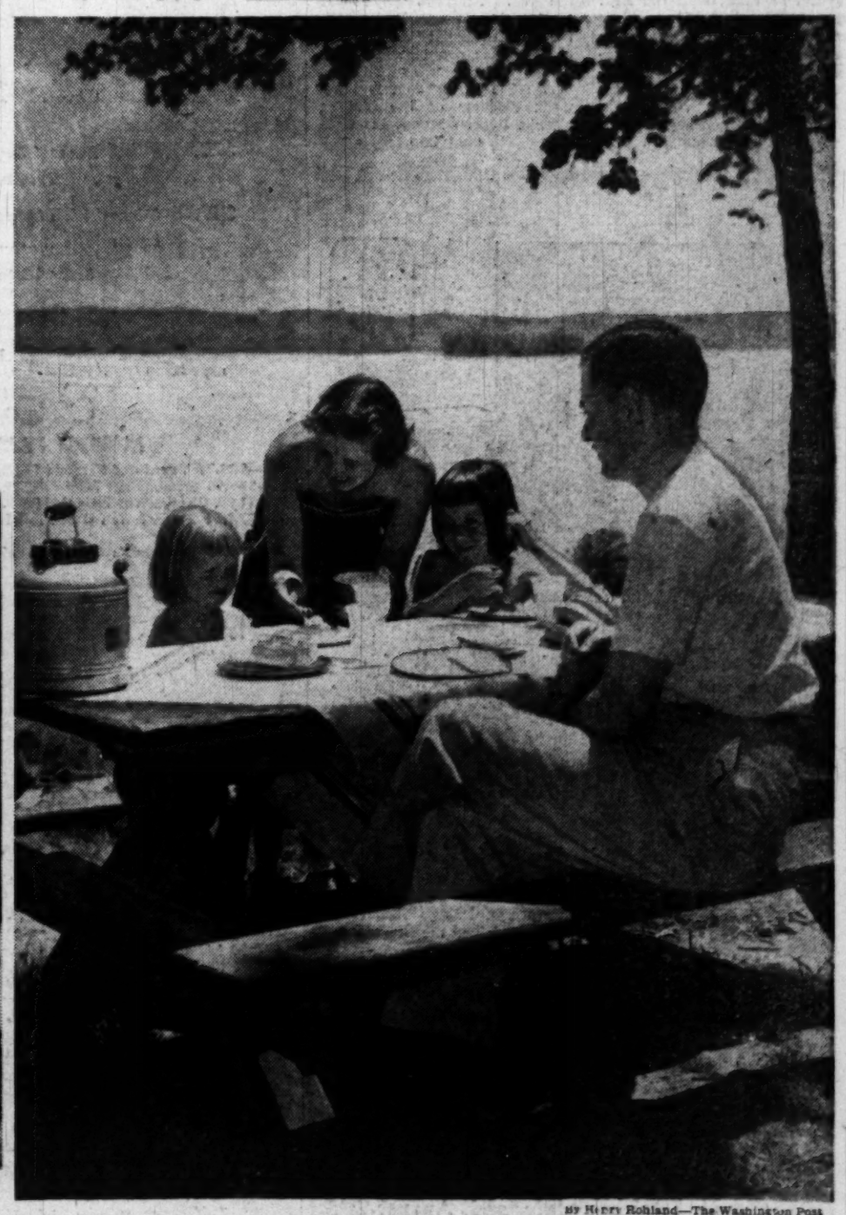
Then, when the family gets hungry, Vickie brings out a tray of watermelon and cool drinks. Snack finished, she stacks the plates and glasses in her new automatic dish washer. That's luxury—without a road map or cover charge.

By Harry Goodwin—The Washington Post

WATER sports in Fairlington? Why not? Of course, you have to furnish your own surf. Here the Williams girls, Bonnie and Chris, get their spray from the family hose. Maybe less exciting than the Atlantic Ocean breakers, but at least it's fresh water. None of that salty taste when the girls get it in their mouths

By Harry Rohland—The Washington Post

IT'S A GOOD thing the Williams aren't going to spend the summer in Switzerland. Where would the girls get their watermelon? But since the family plans a backyard vacation for most of the season, the melons (the youngsters' favorite dish) are only as far away as the kitchen



By Harry Rohland—The Washington Post

MEALS from a summer resort dining room often are quite elegant, but the Williamses would cast their vote any day for a picnic on the Potomac. Vickie Williams doesn't mind the summer cooking, either. She sticks to fried chicken, salads and fruit and rarely lights the oven all summer long

Friendship's New Era

Old McLean Home's Vastness—and Stairs—Proving Formidable

By Marie McNair

FRIENDSHIP, famous for the hospitality of the late Evayln Walsh McLean, will welcome new tenants before long.

Since the death of Washington's No. 1 hostess, the big Georgetown house has undergone many changes. Three families live there, where once the fabulous figure of a vanished era gave to Friendship the literal translation of the word.

Mrs. Harold Walker, who purchased the choice center section—with the dining room wing—has instilled in it some of her own charm, has made of it a delightfully cheerful spot to call home. It's more than she needs, however; the stairs—she can tell you the exact number in each flight—are more than she feels up to every day. And she already owns a house on Massachusetts ave. with an elevator!

So when Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Livesey came along as prospective purchasers Mrs. Walker signed them on the dotted line for the dining room wing. The Liveseys—he's been with the State Department for many years—are, so I've been told, full of plans for remodeling.

Mrs. Walker knows definitely what her next move will be. She'll get off to Webley, her farm on the Eastern Shore, just as fast as she can. And in the fall? Well, that will take care of itself.

Too Many Blands Pose Problem

CONSIDER the plight of the two Mrs. Blands. There's Mrs. Oscar Bland, wife of the Judge, and Mrs. Otis Bland, widow of the Congressman. The two Mr. Blands were candidates for Congress the same year, which is when the confusion originated. Ever since then Mrs. Otis Bland gets Mrs. Oscar Bland's bills; Mrs. Oscar Bland gets Mrs. Otis Bland's invitations.

"I don't mind making excuses for your daughter," Mrs. Otis Bland said one day to her "twin," when Hellen Bland failed to showup at a party. "I'll model your hats too, but I won't pay your bills."

NOTEBOOK NEWS: Col. Jim Batte and his Elenita will be brief visitors in Washington this week on their way from a holiday in North Carolina to Boston where Colonel Batte was graduated last month from the Harvard School of Business Administration. A White House aide until he became a benedict, which automatically removed him from the post, Jim Batte has another year's study before a new assignment.

Mrs. Alf Heiberg is expecting a visit from her daughter, Mrs. John Tennant, who has sold Brookwood, her home in Maryland's Green Spring Valley and will henceforth be a resident of Palm Beach, where she has bought a house. When she arrives the end of the week her mother will have a few friends in to see her.

Colonel and Mrs. Heiberg are keeping cool in Washington this summer in their high-ceiling Georgetown house which has nine air conditioning units, a big garden and a terrace.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Happily Wed Nearly 10 Years to Wonderful Girl, Man, 33, Embarks on Wastrel Course This Year; He Can't Understand Himself and Prays for Help

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I read your column every day and little did I think that I would ever be writing you. Nevertheless here is my problem and I am praying that you may be able to help me.

I am 33 years of age and have been married nearly 10 years to a most wonderful girl. She is a wonderful wife and mother. We have two children, ages 7 and 3, and we have always been happy until this past year. It is my fault.

I guess I am rather selfish and I don't think I've grown up intellectually; at least, not on a par with my age. At any rate, my marriage is just about on the rocks. Lately I have been staying away from home and loafing in bars every chance I get, even though I know it will hurt my wife.

After this happens I feel as though I should disappear or end the thing; however, I am not that crazy yet. I went to a doctor the other day and had a long talk in which I told him everything, even about my writing a lot of checks on my father's bank account. The doctor said I don't need psychiatry, that I just need a lot of hard work. Somehow I don't feel that this is entirely correct.

If you can see any way to help me, your comments will be greatly appreciated by both of us—my wife and myself. G. S.

Man's Plight Isn't Hopeless

DEAR G. S.: I gather the doctor was completely baffled by your account of yourself; and probably also he is a stickler for duty and decency, who has no patience with people who can't behave. So he more or less kicked you out of his presence with the gruff prescription to go to work and forget yourself.

He probably refrained from referring you to psychiatry because he felt you were looking for sympathy, or Santa Claus, and not for a road map out of your difficulties. And as some doctors do, he may take a dim view of psychiatry anyway, as a venturesome practice in which the blind are leading the blind for the most part.

In any case, whatever his private reflections about the matter, I subscribe to your feeling that he was no help. And the fact that you are again asking guidance suggests that you can be helped, because it indicates that you are in earnest, and the "will to be well" is the beginning of redemption when a man is down.

You are in a panic state. You were already deeply discouraged and seriously demoralized (on the unconscious level) when you embarked on a wastrel course a year ago. In staying away from home you've been hiding from your conscience, of which your wife's hurt face has become the symbol. And in becoming a barfly, you are acting out a conviction of being absolutely worthless, a bum who might as well go to hell in a hurry and have done with it.

Driven by Latent Anger and Anxiety

IN writing bad checks on your father's account, you aren't just mooching for easy money. You are having neurotic revenge on him about something. You are fighting an old score with him and defying society at the same time. You are robbing and disgracing him in a manner that aims to hurt and scandalize. And my advice is to find a keen psychiatrist who can help you plum the significance of this morbid destructive behavior.

When you get to the bottom of it, you may discover that his demands of you or his standards for you, were impossibly high from your viewpoint always. And it may be that you began to crack up, psychologically, due to intolerable pressure of conflict between resentment and exhaustive efforts to please.

Possibly this happened as the resentment once exclusively aimed at parents began to take in your wife, also, when you realized that her standards of behavior were much like theirs. Maybe that's why you suddenly, completely and irrationally bolted out of the traces of "being good," after 10 years' happy marriage. Follow these clues and you may find your true center, and from there grow up to be your age. M. H.

Forecast for the Future

Have You Passed the Marital Emotion Test?

By Alton L. Blakeslee

NEW YORK, July 8 (AP).—"Sorry," says the clerk, "No marriage license until you pass your emotionality test."

Startled, the would-be bride and would-be groom murmur, "What's that?"

"It's an emotions test," says the clerk. "You have to take it under our new law. The idea is to cut down on wedded war, and divorce.

"You're old enough to get married. But maybe one or both of you aren't emotionally grown up enough yet. Maybe," the clerk adds glumly, "you're mismatched emotionally." He waves a thumb: "Two doors down, to the left, for the emotionality test."

Such might be the scene someday at the marriage license window under a law proposed by a psychologist, Dr. James F. Bender, director of the National Institute for Human Relations here.

"Marriage is a tough but satisfying job," he says. "Too often it's made miserable or is wrecked by emotional instability of the husband or wife or both.

"According to our estimates, the basic cause of divorce in more than 90 percent of all cases is emotional instability."

That means childish emotions, lack of insight or failure to grow emotionally.

Dr. Bender lists five main attributes of emotional stability:

1. Ability to keep a confidence.
2. A high degree of empathy which means ability to put yourself in another's shoes to know how he feels.
3. Ability to love another more tenderly than yourself.
4. An intimate knowledge of your mood swings or cycles. Most people have cycles of ups and downs in moods, feeling gay at one time, depressed at another, Dr. Bender says. The swings vary in degree and frequency in different people. It helps to know when you're heading down. That may be a tip to see a comedy instead of a tragedy in the movies or on TV, or to have a party, to avoid things that might get you down even more. Knowing your spouse's mood cycle also helps.
5. Most important, readiness to admit your mistakes, to apologize and then do something to make amends.

World Has Changed For Korean Envoy

(This is the thirty-fifth in a series of stories on embassy homes, hosts and hostesses.)

By Elizabeth Maguire

IT HAS been just about a month since the Korean Ambassador, Dr. John Myun Chang, returned from a visit to Seoul. He spent April on a good-will tour of New Zealand and Australia, and the month of May in Korea with his three sons who are all of high school age. He said good-by to his sons around the first of June, and with Mrs. Chang accompanying him, he returned to Washington.

DR. CHANG

Now a world has gone by. The Ambassador is still tall, strong, very personable, and deeply intelligent, but there is an added dignity in his face which comes to big people when they are faced with tragedy.

At the chancery here in Washington, Ambassador Chang puts in endless hours of work, attending conferences, answering phone calls and receiving callers. His lunch takes just one half hour. Despite the war, work is going on at the beautiful embassy on Sheridan Circle to add a chancery in the back and remodel the front of the residence.

The Ambassador is highly respected at home and abroad. In Korea, it is said he has not a single political enemy.

Political Career Includes UN Service

BORN in Seoul, Korea, of a distinguished family, Dr. Chang received his education at Venard Preparatory College in Scranton, Pa., and Manhattan College, New York City. His social and political career include serving as chief delegate to the U. N. General Assembly in Paris, representing the Republic of Korea, 1948; and serving as editorial adviser on the Kyung Hyang Daily. He was named Ambassador to the United States by President Syngman Rhee in January, 1949, and because of the importance of his post, he is considered second only to President Rhee in foreign affairs.

With the Ambassador and Mrs. Chang in America are four children, Teresa, age 7; Matthew, age 9; Benedicta, 17, who was just graduated from Maryville School in Baltimore, and Joseph, 21, who was just graduated from Anselm College in Manchester, N. H., and is going to Princeton in the fall for graduate study. Mrs. Chang is under the doctor's care at the moment, and Benedicta is substituting for her mother as embassy hostess.

Harris & Ewing

MISS BENEDICTA CHANG, daughter of Korean Ambassador and Mrs. Chang, has assumed the duties of embassy hostess while Mrs. Chang is under doctor's care. She is a recent graduate of Maryville School in Baltimore. Here she is shown in the lovely garden of the embassy, wearing her national costume

Found a Way to Fill a Farmhouse

A FARMHOUSE which was too big for them started a New York Times telegrapher and his wife in the role of local parents to the children of diplomats, service people, newspapermen and other members of Washington's transient population.

Early in the war Ralph Cahall, who has worked for 25 years in the Times bureau here, and his wife bought a 200-year-old place, Elmwood Manor, near Santa Heim, Md., about 2 miles beyond Laurel.

Ralph worked at nights and figured that he could fix up the place during the daytime. But the old brick mansion turned out to be quite a proposition.

When a widower with a small son and daughter came out to ask for the Cahalls' help in looking after his children until he could make permanent arrangements, a good idea was born.

Children Rambled Through Woodland

THE "new children" brought in extra income and were company as well for the Cahall's son, Dickey, then about 6. The kids were very little trouble. There isn't a dangerous highway within 2 miles. So the children rambled through 500 acres of woodland, swam and hunted for crayfish in the Patuxent River below the house, and rode a pony and saddle-horses. Mr. Cahall likes to ride, too.

During the war Capitalites sent on foreign assignments, and those unable to find suitable houses in town, brought out their children. John Sherrard's children stayed at Elmwood Manor while he was in the Pacific as a Time correspondent.

The Cahalls in seven years have looked after Korean, Lithuanian, French, Dutch, English and Chinese youngsters, as well as Americans. Twelve-year-old Nancy, daughter of the Mexican Ambassador, Senor Don Rafael de la Colina and Senora Donna de la Colina, is there now. Children may stay for a week while their parents are settling in a new house or for years while their parents are on foreign assignments.

Add Classroom During Schooldays

THE Cahalls have added a class-room for use during the school year. Three teachers hold classes using the Calvert system, a wire recorder, TV set and a few other trimmings. Mrs. Cahall, who before her marriage taught music, doesn't give lessons but she takes a special interest in the children who study piano, flute or violin.

But Elmwood Manor still runs like a family rather than a boarding school. In the summer about the only rules are "be on time for meals," "take an afternoon nap" (for the smaller children) and "go to bed early."

The number of children varies from half a dozen to about twenty but there are always enough to make an orchestra or a ballgame. They scatter out to ride bikes, take all-day horseback trips occasionally and enter neighboring horseshows. To offset this touch of swank, they also make their own beds and help count the laundry.

This year Elmwood Manor took one step towards greater formality. Young Larry Tombs, whose father, Alfred, recently wrote "Raising a Riot," wrote a school song. It ends, " . . . where each child is understood. Hail to thee, Elmwood."

Rehoboth Roundup

D. C. Woman Initiates Cottage Art Tour

By Virginia Cullen

REHOBOTH BEACH, Del., July 8.—A midsummer cottage art tour for Rehoboth Beach has been initiated by a Washington woman, Mrs. Wallace W. Chiswell of 2825 Normanstone dr., N. W., who is here at her cottage, Hemlock Hedges, on Henlopen ave., and who, incidentally, is this resort's only woman commissioner, thought up the idea of the tour with a three-fold purpose.

Summer vacationists will pay a nominal fee to peek into the cottages of some 20 home owners, the money to go toward the Rehoboth Art League's building fund. Mrs. Chiswell once served as league president. Art lovers will get the opportunity to see paintings by well-known artists hung in a domestic home atmosphere. And the two-day tour, set for July 20 and 21, will be an added attraction for visitors besides the usual routine of beach lounging and visiting night-spots.

The Washington colony here is responding enthusiastically to the idea by permitting their cottages to be listed on the tour. Besides Mrs. Chiswell's summer home, other Washingtonians listed are Dr. and Mrs. Carl E. Henning, who have built a new cottage at Second and Park ave.; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Trew's spacious home at Surf and Henlopen ave.; Dr. and Mrs. G. Vicor Simpson's home at 18 Pennsylvania ave., and the Douglas Whitlock's summer place at the Indian Beach Washington colony on the south of this resort.

Of course, this town's eighteenth century showplace and gardens, the Homestead, will be a tour highlight. The residence of Col. and Mrs. Wilbur Sherman Corkran in Henlopen Acres, with its weather - beaten cypress shingles, is the best example hereabouts of the architectural style employed by the first settlers around Cape Henlopen. It is furnished throughout with carefully selected early American pieces, while in the gardens are many relics of the old windjammer era of this salty locality. Many prize-winning artists who have exhibited at the Rehoboth Art League, which is sponsoring the tour, will show their works in the various homes to be opened between 2 and 7 p. m. the two days.

Club Exhibit Planned

ANOTHER big July art event announced this week is the twenty-second annual art exhibition of the Village Improvement Association in their boardwalk clubhouse. Following close on the heels of the cottage art tour, it will open July 26 with a tea and private viewing, and the paintings will remain hanging through August 30.

Mrs. Ethel P. B. Leach of Frederica, Del., one of Delaware's best-known artists, who with her artist husband, William Leach, are among the original cottage settlers at Rehoboth, is chairman of the V. I. A. show, which she initiated in 1928. This was the original effort of this resort to exploit vacationing craftsmen, leading to its present eminence as an art colony. The Rehoboth Art League was formed later and Mrs. Leach became its permanent honorary president.

Cottagers are responding generously to the call for "White Elephant" articles for the big summer bazaar of All Saints' Episcopal Church next Wednesday and Thursday in the Parish House on Olive ave. So liberal has been the response after ransacking obscure corners and attics for such articles, that the whole lower floor of the Parish House will be used this time for white elephant booths.

The rector's wife, Mrs. Charles Reid Leech, is chairman of the "Parcel Post Booth," where assorted articles received by mail will be sold pig-in-a-poke. There will also be a luncheon each day of the bazaar as well as booths for flowers, antiques, fancy work and other bazaar favorites, with the money going toward the church building fund. Mrs. John Jay Williams is general chairman of this event.

Through for Holiday

REHOBOTH celebrated the Independence Day holidays with the largest influx of people in many years. Police estimated some 35,000 visitors were here. With every available lodging space taken up, hundreds slept on the boardwalk benches, in the sand under the boardwalk, in parked cars, and around in the grass in the wooded sections. A real old-fashioned fireworks display on the Fourth was staged by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Murray on the ocean front in Henlopen Acres, opposite their palatial summer home, the Pink House, built by one of the duPonts for his daughter, Mrs. Campbell Weir, which the Murrays bought last year. They entertained several hundred children for the display.

Many from this resort went over to nearby Lewes where the ancient town on the Delaware Breakwater staged a real July the Fourth gymkhana of old-fashioned street games and races, a custom dating back to colonial days of this "birthplace of Delaware."

Warm for November

Roll Out the Electric Fan and Read About Cold Weather Fashions

By Peggy Preston

WELL, roll out the electric fan, jump into a nice, cool bare midriff dress and get set to read all about the fall fashions.

Because that's what you are in for during the next six or seven days. While you are concentrating on beating the heat in Washington, this reporter will be rushing the season in New York, drooling over winter-time fashions in the middle of a hot, smothering July afternoon.

For we're off to Manhattan this morning, making our annual summer junket in search of first-hand knowledge of furs, woolens and cold-weather garb in general. We'll be taking a week-long look at the high fashion collections in the designer's showrooms, the same clothes that will be tempting you in local shops about the end of August.

Fall Forecast

Girls Will Be Girls Again, Not Flappers

By Dorothy Roe

NEW YORK, July 8 (AP).—Girls will be girls again this fall.

The last hint of the flat-chested silhouette, the boyish bob and the flapper slouch has been removed firmly from the fall fashion picture. The designers vote unanimously for feminine curves.

Fall fashion previews, which will open tomorrow for the benefit of the Nation's press, will accentuate the positive, eliminate the negative.

Skirts are almost uniformly slim and straight, slit for walking comfort and cut on peg-top lines. Their length is about the same as current styles or slightly shorter.

The fall fashion collections illustrate once more the power of public opinion in shaping the mode. Last season's abortive effort to bring back the unflattering sack silhouette of the 1920's has been killed indefinitely and finally by the roar of protest that went up from Mr. and Mrs. General Public.

Women Balked, Won the Fight

WOMEN made it clear that they would be pushed just so far and no further by the whimsies of fashion. The result is a fall silhouette that is for the most part graceful and flattering, with few distorted extremes, geared to the taste and needs of Mrs. U.S.A.

Most dramatic news in the fall fashion lineup is in fabrics, which are handsomer and more varied than in many years. Surface interest and texture are of first importance.

Color also has a field day in fall styles. Nosing out the indispensable black for town wear is the new charcoal or banker's gray, shown in suits, coats and dresses. This is a useful background tone, to be dramatized by accessories in vivid color, the favorites being orange and flame tones.

All the warm colors are in high favor for fall, ranging from golden yellow, through orange and rust and the tawny autumn leaf colors.

Big Names On the List

THIS jaunt is made at the invitation of the New York Dress Institute's Couture Group. It's an organization made up of such top-flight stylists as Carnegie, Trigere, McCardell, Mangone and the mighty Christian Dior.

Approximately 150 of us descend on the city for the occasion. But only the rank novice attempts to keep pace with the schedule which is guaranteed to produce ulcers, along with the hectic prose.

Not only do the dress designers tote out their wares for us, but every other type of women's wear goes on display at the same time. Shoes, stockings, hats, lingerie, furs, sportswear, junior and budget fashions, cosmetics, jewelry, gloves, handbags, scarfs, fabrics and even wrist watches, are on the list. Big headache of the week is to decide which showings to attend and which to skip, since half of them are scheduled for the same hour, in widely dispersed sections of the city.

Air-Conditioning Helps a Lot

BUT, we'll have to admit it's a lot of fun. Especially when the Manhattanites have the good grace to stage the showings in air-conditioned rooms. They don't always, but we keep hoping.

At any rate, if we survive the heat and the hurry, we'll be reporting back daily to The Washington Post beginning Tuesday morning. Advance reports indicate the news may be pleasanter than usual. We are told that the flat-chested look, the boyish bob, and all the other fashion revivals of the '20's which scared us so six months ago, are back where they belong—in moth balls.

So, are you interested in where the hemline will be for fall . . . what's new in necklines, shoulderlines, chapeaux and footwear? Then, look right this way girls, for the answers which we'll give with words—and pictures as well.

Tobé Says . . .

Sandals Are Prettiest Footwear

I can't remember when shoes have been as pretty as they are this summer. Prettiest of all are the sandals—of such fine thin stripping criss-crossed on the leg that I sometimes wonder how they hold up at all. But they do, and women who wear them, love them.

The nice thing about this fashion is that you can have it in any type of shoe you want or need; gay colored kid or calf flat sandals for casual playclothes; medium or slender spike heels in all white or all black for dress up. There are new fine black suede thin-strip sandals coming in now to wear with black sheers this summer and into the fall with cocktail dreses until the snow actually flies.

She Preaches the Gospel of Learning

'Mama' Sarah's' Vision Comes True

By Bem Price

ROCKMART, GA.—In the vision a voice said, "Go through the gate, Sarah, and help your people."

So Sarah L. Murphy went forth, preaching the gospel of learning, faith and love. To "Mama Sarah" the greatest of these was love.

For five years the round little Negro woman traveled through the rolling hills of Polk County, Ga., organizing a school here, a school there. Then, in 1934, "Mama Sarah" founded what is now the only home for indigent and orphaned Negro children in Georgia.

She named it for her own 9-year-old daughter, Sarah Denavure Murphy, "who lay a corpse May 9, 16 years ago."

For herself and her husband, Marion, Mrs. Murphy mapped a life of poverty and hardship, recalling only that Jesus said "Suffer the little children to come unto me."

Now there are 48 children, proudly robed in the castoffs of the more fortunate, who call this graying, bespectacled woman "Mama." There have been over 200 in the past.

She is their teacher, their cook, nursemaid, housekeeper and inexhaustible wellspring of affection.

Two-Room Affair

BY THE standards of the world outside the hills, maybe the Sarah Denavure Murphy home and school leaves something to be desired.

The school is a two-room affair, badly in need of paint and repairs. Thirty-two girls and the small children crowd into the Murphy's house. The 16 boys bunk in makeshift cabins faintly resembling the trailer bodies of old trucks.

To finance the home, Mrs. Murphy has only the small sum she makes as a teacher, $25 monthly from Polk County, $25 from the city of Rockmart and a weekly contribution of $2 from one Sunday school and $1 from another.

All of the children, of course, pitch in to help on the 262-acre farm bought with sweat and tears over the years. They make a little money picking and canning berries, doing chores on the farms of neighbors and cooking.

Only a handful of the children ever have seen a movie. A toy is a thing almost too beautiful to play with. Such luxuries as candy and pop are something beyond conception.

Years Have Been Hard

THE years have been hard for "Mama Sarah" and her husband, but this is only the beginning. They dream of a large dormitory and maybe even a junior college where the children can support themselves and go to school.

It was nearly 52 years ago that this woman with the gentle smile and soothing hand was born in the cabin of a former slave, Gabe McLendon, in the tiny community of Seney, Ga. When she was 5, her mother died. Shortly thereafter her father, a sharecropper, lost everything.

Mrs. Murphy got what schooling she could and worked in the fields. She helped her father and her new step-mother buy a little 20-acre patch.

When she was 18 she traveled 71 miles south to Atlanta to enter Spellman High School. She lived with her brother Charles and her sister-in-law while she settled down to gain the education she needed.

"God called me back," she explained.

"One night," she said, "I had a vision. I was walking alongside a great canal. It was deep and swift and on the other side was a fence. There was a woman in the canal digging the ground out from under me about as fast as I could walk.

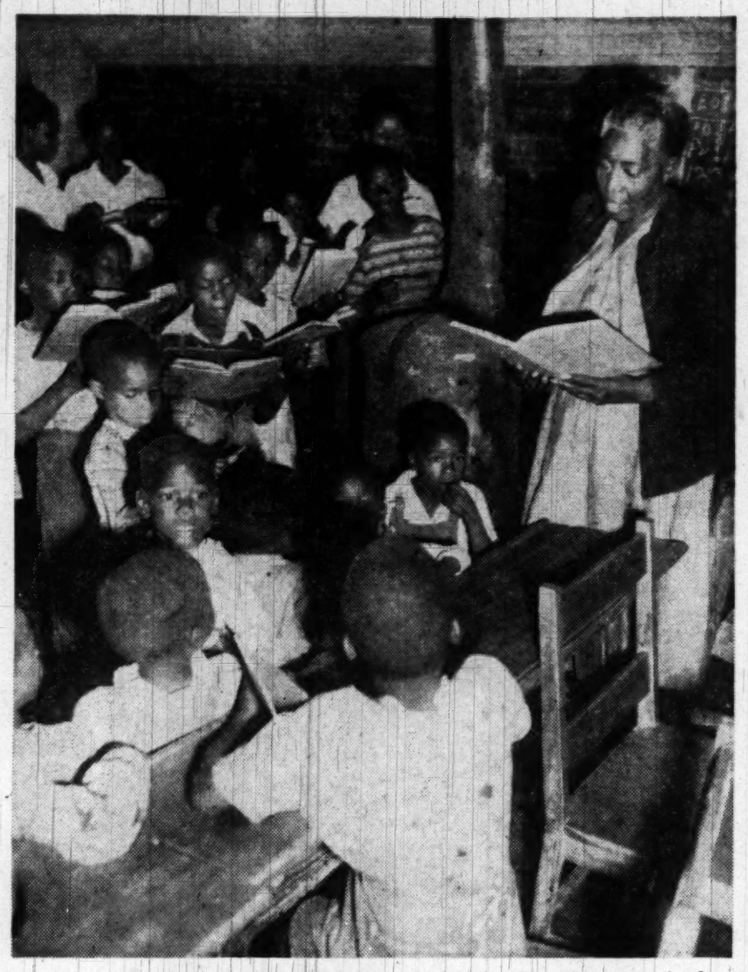
"I was fenced in all around. Then I came to a gate. Then I heard a voice say, 'Go through the gate, Sarah, and help your people.'"

"MAMA SARAH" paused and then continued, "I'm dreaming now of a junior college on the farm. The boys and girls could get on their bikes and ride to it, or if they don't have bikes, they could just put their foot in the road.

"They need it; they need it bad. There's not a Negro doctor in the whole country. I don't know what I'd do if it weren't for the white doctor who looks after the children and doesn't charge a thing.

"There's many a boy and girl in this county and these hills who would go to college if they had the means. I'm trying to inspire them to go on and make something of themselves."

By The Associated Press



"Mama Sara" reads to some of her 48 "children." Out of meager funds, she has provided them a school and a home on her farm.

Field Work Plan Aids 900 At Vassar

MORE than 900 Vassar students have received practical experience in the social sciences during the first year of the college's five-year expanded program of field work, it is disclosed in the annual report of the project's director, Mrs. Clarice H. L. Pennock.

Financed by a grant of $37,500 last June from the Carnegie Corporation of New York, the program has enabled 52 students to receive academic credit for part-time internships in local government, health, welfare and civic organizations. Other forms of field work under the program are surveys, group projects and observation trips.

While a large part of the field work has been in the Poughkeepsie, N. Y., area, in cooperation with municipal authorities, the students have ranged as far afield as Washington, the Tennessee Valley and the coal fields of West Virginia.

Internships, arranged by the college with the agency providing the best practical illustration of classroom work, obligate a student to pass four hours a week on the job. One point of credit is given for every 60 hours of work.

Four surveys were undertaken during the first year of the expanded program—three in Poughkeepsie and one in Rhinebeck Township, N. Y. In Rhinebeck the students surveyed religious affiliations and community activity as a basis for youth programs. The study was made at the request of the Parent-Teacher Association and the churches in the town.

The other studies were of training and job opportunities for high school students in Poughkeepsie, at the request of the Guidance Bureau; a survey to determine the eligibility of families for a housing project, for the Poughkeepsie Housing Authority, and a study of retail clothing prices for the State Department of Welfare, for use in allocating clothing to persons on relief.

A typical group project was that assigned to a class in applied psychology, which gave and scored intelligence tests for the Poughkeepsie High School, and psychological tests for the handicapped and hard of hearing, in public and parochial schools.

Among the observation trips made, some under small scholarships from the field-work committee, were those to the United Nations, the New York Stock Exchange and the State government in Albany.

Cherokee Drama Witnessed by 3000

CHEROKEE, N. C., July 8.—Under a full moon and a canopy of stars in the cool Mountainside Theater, nearly 3000 persons gave a thrilling ovation to the great Cherokee drama, "Unto These Hills," here for a summer-long run.

Performances are on a five-night schedule, Wednesdays through Sundays, until Labor Day, September 4. Plans are being made for a dedication ceremony early in August by President Truman.

Meters Don't Hurt Collecting

By William M. Stuart

WHEN the metered mail system (now so popular) was originated 30 years ago by the Pitney-Bowes Co., many philatelists feared for the future of stamp collecting. But all such fears have been discounted, for during the past 30 years there have been more postage stamps printed and issued, and more meters used, than ever before.

If the truth were known, a large number of collectors have added meters to their activities, having abolished all fears of injury to stamp collecting.

Last year the metered system amounted to over 500 million dollars, representing 36 percent of all postage paid on United States mail.

The meter system is responsible for many new devices to improve handling of the mail. One at a parcel post window weighs the package, computes the fee, receives the money, presses a lever and starts the machine. A small printed label, gummed, complete with postage of the correct value, plus the postmark, gives even the date of mailing. Through this process, stamp-licking is abolished.

New devices are constantly being added to the postal service, but it is believed the romance of stamp collecting can never be abolished by installation of meters.

ON JULY 15, air mail service will be inaugurated over segment No. 2 of Route A M 93 between Phoenix, Superior, Globe-Miami, Safford, Clifton-Morenci, Ariz.; Lordsburg, Silver City-Hurley, Dering, Las Cruces, N. Mex.; and El Paso, Tex. Special cachets will be provided.

ON JULY 8 philatelic treatment was provided for covers carried by the first flight from New York, N. Y., to Rome, Italy, by the Italian Air Lines. The air mail postage rate was 15 cents per half ounce and 10 cents each for air letters.

FIVE STAMPS were released on July 2 to mark the third Aeronautican meeting of Yugoslavia. The denominations are 2, 3, 5, 10 and 20-dinar. The stamps may be obtained for 82 cents a set from the Yugoslavian Philatelic Agency, 25 Bever st., New York City. Franklin R. Bruns, jr., is philatelic agent.

THE NEXT MEETING of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A. will be held Tuesday at 8 p. m. in Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st., nw., when the speaker will be Ignatz Reiner of New York, N. Y. He is vice president of the Society of Philatelic Americans and is expected to show his famous "black jacks."

THE ANNUAL ELECTION of the Society of Philatelic Americans will take place on August 16, 1950, during the annual convention at Philadelphia, Pa. The following have been nominated: President, Hil F. Best, Grosse Point, Mich.; vice president, Ignatz Reiner, New York, N. Y.; secretary, Joseph M. Clary, San Francisco, Calif.; treasurer, Ernest C. Lyman, Binghamton, N. Y., and Stephen G. Rich, Verona, N. J.; directors at large, vote for two, Lee H. Cornell, Wichita, Kans.; Edward K. Minear, Danville, Ill.; Archy S. Myers, Philadelphia; Samuel A. Poe, East Orange, N. J.; William P. Schoenfield, Dallas, Tex.; Cyrus R. Thompson, San Francisco, Calif., and Walter J. Vredenburgh, St. Louis, Mo.

The Capital City Post Card Club will meet on July 12 at the Hot Shoppe, at the terminal of the Georgia ave, carline, where dinner will be served in the "Peacock" Room at 6:45 p. m.

Horse Shows Keep Virginia In Front Rank

RICHMOND, July 8—Virginia is maintaining its traditional reputation as a center of fine horses and skillful horsemanship, in shows scheduled for this summer and fall.

The Farmington Junior Horse Show, near Charlottesville, on July 15, opens up, followed by the Goshen Lions Club show, on July 22; and the Professional Horsemen's Association horse show, set for July 28-29 at Berryville, near Winchester.

Purcellville has a pony show August 5, while the Bull Run Hunt Club holds a show at historic Manassas the following day.

The Glenmore Hunt Club, of Staunton, takes over with a two-day affair, August 11-12.

On three consecutive week-ends come the "Big Three" of shows: Bath County at Hot Springs, scheduled August 18-19; Keswick, scheduled August 26-27; and Warrenton, scheduled September 2-3-4.

The Waverly show, in Sussex County, south of the James River, will bring show horses to that community on September 16 and 17. McLean, near Washington, D. C., plans its show September 30.

Another "big three" is due in October: The Farmington Horse show on October 7-8, the Trinity show at Upperville on October 13-14, and the SPCA exhibition at Middleburg, October 21.

Keep in Trim

Women Gain Energy in Losing Fat

By Ida Jean Kain

Fashion for streamlines to the contrary, many middle-aged women take the comfortable view that after all they are not trying to be glamour girls and have a 25-inch waistline, so what difference does it make if their curves are on the buxom order. They are quite content to leave calorie dodging and calisthenics to their vainer sisters, eat as they please, and let the pounds come on where they may.

However, weight is not merely a matter of looks . . . but of health. It's not because the excess fat changes the waist measure from a slim 25 inches to a bulky 32 or more that trouble results, but because fat is a burden and a serious handicap to all the vital organs.

Puffing Convinces Her

One woman wrote that she didn't realize what it meant to tote excess weight until she carried two 10-pound sacks of sugar from the first floor to the third . . . and that by the time she reached the top she was really puffing. Then she sat down and faced the fact that actually she was carrying that much of a load around all the time, in overweight. True, the bags of sugar were added to her own excess . . . still the experience was an eye-opener.

And it is always interesting to note that the women who decide to reduce purely from the looks standpoint in order to fit into their normal size, stress how much better they feel with less weight.

One dietitian friend of mine who reduced 25 pounds said it was the greatest favor she ever did her feet! And she has so much more energy . . . now she can go all day without tiring. Normal weight gives anyone more energy.

Energy Does Not Lessen

Still, many of you write that you hesitate to diet for fear you will have less energy while reducing . . . highly important consideration for a busy person.

On a protective diet, energy is not lessened. Of course some of the energy-yielding foods must be left out of the menu so nature can call on stored fat for part of the fuel requirements, for that is the only way weight can be lost. But a diet that provides the protective materials in normal amounts, keeps the body engine running on all 16 cylinders while the stored fat is being burned for part of the energy needs. This smooth running adds up to buoyant health.

In fact, a scientifically planned reducing diet, high in protein, minerals and vitamins, is usually far superior in quality to the high starch and high fat meals that added the pounds.

With Poulet a la Marengo, serve rice and a simple custard for dessert

Favorite Dish of French Tutor

By Harriet Jean Anderson

A LITTLE French lady came to visit us the other day. Her name is Jeanne Colin. She is white haired, delicate of face—a person of distinction.

Although she is a private tutor in French, cooking and entertaining remains her hobby. Her favorite meal—Poulet a la Marengo, curry of rice, a simple custard. And for rainy days an oxtail soup that we have modernized with "pressure."

POULET A LA MARENGO
- 4 pounds fowl, disjointed, floured
- 3 tablespoons olive oil
- 3 tablespoons butter
- 10 small onions
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 4 averaged- size tomatoes, peeled
- ½ cup veal or chicken broth
- ½ pound fresh whole mushrooms, sliced
- 1 cup dry white wine
- Salt and pepper

Brown floured fowl in hot fats and place in casserole. Brown onions and garlic about five minutes over low heat. Quarter tomatoes and add with mushrooms, broth, and white wine. Season to taste and pour over chicken in casserole. Cook chicken, covered, in modearte oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) 1¼ hours, or until chicken is tender. Remove to hot platter and thicken sauce if necessary. Pour over chicken. Yield: Four portions.

CREME RENVERSEE CARAMEL
- 1 quart milk
- ½ stick cinnamon
- 6 eggs
- 1 tablespoon vanilla
- ¾ cup sugar

Set oven for 300 degrees Fahrenheit. Place milk in top of double boiler with cinnamon and heat over hot water. Remove cinnamon. Beat eggs thoroughly and slowly pour hot milk over eggs, stirring constantly. Add vanilla. Place mold in oven to heat. Melt the sugar in a heavy skillet until it becomes a rich caramel brown. Act quickly and have the baking mold hot. Turn the caramelized sugar into the warm mold, and with holders, rotate the mold so that the inside is coated with the caramel. Turn in the custard mixture and place in a pan of hot water in the oven. Bake 45 minutes, or until a silver knife inserted comes out clean. Chill in refrigerator overnight. With a knife detach the caramel crust from the sides of the mold, so that the custard has the caramel topping intact. Turn out upside-down on a platter. Yield: Six portions.

OXTAIL SOUP A LA JEANNE
- 2 oxtails, disjointed
- 3 tablespoons fat
- 1 pint hot water
- Pinch of red pepper
- 1½ teaspons salt
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper
- ½ cup sliced carrots
- ½ cup diced onion
- ½ cup diced celery
- 2 cups sliced mushrooms, sauteed
- 2 cups plain chicken broth
- 1 cup tomato juice
- 3 tablespoons flour
- ¼ to ½ cup Madeira wine

Braise oxtails in fat in bottom of pressure cooker. Add water, seasonings and vegetables. Cook at 15 pounds pressure for 20 minutes. Cool and open cooker. Blend tomato juice and flour. Add with wine to oxtail mixture. Cook, stirring constantly, until thickened. Yield: Four portions.

PARTY PUNCH

Ingredients: 1 cup boiling water, 4 teaspoons tea leaves, 1 cup light corn syrup, 4 cups cold water, 1 cup lime juice, 1 quart gingerale, lime slices, maraschino cherries.

Method: Pour boiling water over tea; steep 5 minutes; strain. Add light corn syrup, cold water and lime juice; mix thoroughly. Chill. Add gingerale. Pour into punch bowl over ice. Garnish with lime slices and maraschino cherries. Makes about 3 quarts.

Cooking Cues . . .

Scallops may be had fresh or frozen. Bay scallops come from shallow waters, are small in size and delicately flavored. Deep-sea scallops are larger and not as delicately flavored; some cooks like to cut these large scallops in four before broiling.

When you're making strawberry shortcake, crush some of the berries and fold them into part of the whipped cream; use this between the hot biscuit or sponge cake. Then top with the larger whole or halved berries and the remaining sweetened whipped cream.

To stretch chicken salad add cooked rice along with the celery, seasonings and mayonnaise.

Salads on Half Shell Look Tasty

Cool, tangy salads on the half shell make perfect hot weather meals. Scoop out tomatoes, peppers, avocados or grapefruit for the shells. Shiny tomatoes are a wonderful setting for bright fillings. Cut large tomatoes in half, scoop out centers, sprinkle with salt and pepper. Mix cooked peas with seafood and mayonnaise.

Green peppers go especially well with meat salads. Cut off end of pepper in notched, pointed style with paring knife. Remove seeds, ribs. Refill with salad of chopped cooked veal, chopped celery, cucumber, scallions, and pimiento mixed with dry mustard, salt, wine vinegar, mayonnaise.

Seafood salad looks good in a grapefruit nest. Cut grapefruit in half, remove fruit and as much white pulp as possible. Snip grapefruit edge 1½ inches deep with scissors. Fill with mixture of finely cut lettuce and celery, lemon juice, mayonnaise, salt, pepper and canned or fresh seafood.

Summer Fruit Plate

For a summer fruit plate serve melon rings with crunchy cream-cheese stuffed celery for flavor and texture contrasts.

Theme of the convention was "We Serve to Live—Unselfish, Worldenvisioned, With Spiritual and Economic Determination."

Founded in Oakland, Calif., in 1921 by a group of civic-minded executive women, the organization has grown into the largest international association of classified executive women in the world.

The Soroptimist Club of Washington, D. C., was represented at this convention by Miss Mary Judge, outgoing president; Mrs. Mary C. Hysong, incoming president; Miss Ella Werner, outgoing regional director of the South Atlantic region; Miss Mary Bourke, incoming regional director of the South Atlantic region, and delegates, Mrs. Marie Rogers and Miss Mary Elizabeth Mersheimer.

The chairman of the civics committee of the Washington club has reported that $1400 has been raised by the club to send cardiac children to summer camp.

Dairy Dishes for Supper

Cheese and eggs and milk are excellent to use in supper dishes because they give the same fine body-building protein as meat, poultry and fish.

Pick an 'Outside' Model For Youngster to Imitate

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

When a child is naughty, it springs so naturally to the parents' lips to say, "Why can't you act the way Bobby does—or Ellen or Susan? They are such nice children."

Unhappily, this never inspires the child to imitate the other child, however admired by the parent. There is an element of jealousy which makes the "bad" boy act worse. He has a feeling that he is himself, whatever he is, and he doesn't want to be like these other "good "kids.

If we want to spur children to act in more admirable ways we would do beter to hold up some adult, preferably outside the family; some military, naval or aviation hero or heroine, real or fictional, rather than some child in or outside the family.

Comparison a Mistake

Parents make the mistake of comparing a child with some other member of the family. "Be like your little brother who never cries, or is always clean," or what have you. This arouses animosity toward the other child and a sense of inferiority. If this happens often enough the child may give up hopes of ever being as this other child. So what is the use of trying? He may as well be as bad as he wants to be. No one will ever admire him or his acts.

It's much more profitable to set a standard the child can reach and let him believe that he is edging toward it. "You are washing yourself up so nicely, these days," a mother says, "and now just another swipe at that ear and it will shine like a seashell." It's quite apparent that these are better tactics than to point out, "Why can't you ever get your ears clean the way Brother does."

Appreciate Praise

Children have a touching appreciation of our praise of them. They begin to feel and act differently when we point out their good points, their marks of improvement; instead of harping constantly on what still is to be accomplished.

It is so hard for children to be perfect at any time. It is doubly difficult even to improve if a child's eyes are fixed always on what he hasn't done, or isn't able to do; instead of seeing himself as having overcome some obstacle, as having moved nearer toward the standards set by the parents.

He thrives best when he measures himself against himself instead of some real individual who is forever outdistancing him.

Sour Cream for Sandwiches

Commercially prepared sour cream may be used instead of mayonnaise occasionally for sandwiches. It's delicious in a hard-cooked egg or chopped ham filling. Good in a mushroom spread, too.

Men Like Calves Liver

Men like a dinner menu of calves' liver and bacon, French fried onion rings, mashed potatoes, and a salad of head lettuce with blue cheese dressing. For dessert, serve a fruit pie and coffee.

Private Enterprise Takes a Crack at Slum Clearance

Apartments To Replace Slum Area

By Robert P. Jordan

CONSTRUCTION of an eight-story apartment building for Negroes—a project which will erase rat-infested slums in the 1800 block of T st. nw.— will begin in about 30 days.

The elevator-type structure, to cost around $500,000, will be the first of its kind built for Negroes in downtown Washington. It will contain 66 apartments renting at $80 and $90 and parking space for 30-odd cars.

Announcement of the project was made yesterday by the architect and structural engineer, Milton J. Prassas. To him, it is an instance of what private enterprise—out to make a return on its investment—can do in the field of slum clearance.

Entrance to the apartment building will be at 1825 T st. nw. The structure will have a frontage of 100 feet and a depth of 68 feet. It will be erected on land now occupied by five sagging frame dwellings.

These rotting houses are to be razed within two weeks, according to Prassas. When they are torn down, he said, T st. nw. will be cleared of slums from 16th st. to Connecticut ave. Built around the turn of the century, some of the houses haven't any sanitary facilities or electricity, he reported.

All tenants have been evicted. They readily agreed on learning that housing for Negroes was to replace the dwellings, Prassas related.

The corporation which is sponsoring the project is Holly House, Inc., 6980 Maple st. nw. President is Stewart Bainum, District plumbing contractor. It paid more than $30,000 for the 6800 square feet of land—a price nearly $10,000 above its worth as appraised by the Federal Housing Administration.

FHA's appraisal, Prassas noted, is based on the land and the finished building.

The architect observed that private developers could carry out large-scale slum clearance operations if, generally, the land involved weren't so expensive.

"The key to the whole problem," he said, "is land cost. In this case, we have paid beyond what FHA thinks it is worth, because it is a good long-term investment."

Prassas suggested that a method of land purchase be worked out—possibly with Federal aid—which would permit funds loaned for buying slum areas to be amortized along with the building mortgage. Paying off land costs over 30 or so years, he said, would enable developers to construct low-cost walk-up apartment projects.

As it is, the rent scale proposed for the apartment house to be built at 1825 T st. nw. is the lowest for an elevator-type structure in this area, he reported.

The building construction cost is FHA insured.

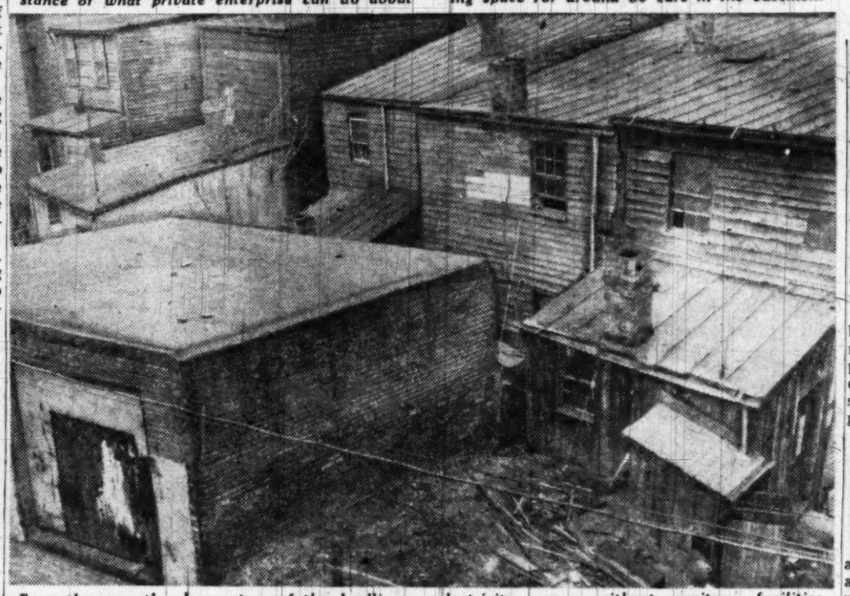
Half of the apartment's units will be efficiencies, the other half will be one-bedroom units, according to the architect. The efficiencies will rent at $80; the one-bedroom units at $90.

All apartments will have television outlets. Storage facilities and automatic laundry facilities will be located in the basement. A sun deck is planned on the roof.

Parking space will be in the basement and subbasement. A self-service pushbutton elevator will carry autos to which ever level is desired.

Construction of this eight-story apartment house will begin in about a month at 1825 T st. nw. It's designer, Milton J. Prassas, terms it an instance of what private enterprise can do about slum clearance. The $500,000 structure, to house Negroes, will replace slum dwellings now on the site. It will contain 66 apartments and parking space for around 30 cars in the basement

These crumbling, time-worn frame houses are to be torn down in about two weeks to make way for the apartment building at left. Tenants have just been evicted. With razing of the dwellings, the only blighted area in the 1800 block of T st. nw. will be cleaned up. They cover an area of 6800 square feet. The land cost more than $30,000—an amount much higher than its ap-



From the rear, the slum nature of the dwellings is clearly seen. Some of the houses are without electricity, some without sanitary facilities. Trash litters the backyards from house to alley

Semidetached Houses

Plans are in progress for 15 semidetached houses to be built in the vicinity of Oneida, Oglethorpe, 6th st. and Eastern ave. ne., by Maurice Lipnick, 3200 16th st. nw. Sub-bids will be taken soon.

41 Arlington Homes to Be Built

Snell Construction Corp., 5900 19th st. N., Arlington, has been given a permit to build 41 dwellings in these locations: 6100 and 6200 blocks of 30th st. N., 6400 block of 29th st. N., 1900 and 2000 blocks of Quincy st. N., 2900 block of N. Sycamore st. and the 3000 block of N. Roosevelt st., Arlington.

The homes are to be of brick and cinderblock construction, one-story in height, and 40 by 25 feet in size.

20 Houses Scheduled

O'Hara Corp., 5742 27th st. nw., has received a permit to construct 20 two-story and basement houses in the 1800 block of Chillum rd., Chillum, Md. Construction is to be of brick and cinderblock.

FHA Lifts Mortgage Limits Here

THE FEDERAL Housing Administration yesterday declared Greater Washington a "high cost area" and raised the limits on certain types of mortgages it will insure here.

Announced by FHA's District Insuring Office, the action is expected to put the administration effectively into the business of underwriting the financing of homes built for less than $10,000 in this area.

Authorization of increased mortgage ceilings—provided for by Congress in the Housing Act of 1950—was given by FHA Commissioner Franklin D. Richards "to help meet the higher construction cost situation in the District of Columbia area." It is retroactive to April 20, 1950.

As a result, builders will be able to construct homes under $10,000 here with the higher mortgage limits, and home buyers can get FHA insurance to finance the home with only a small down payment.

Most popular type of financing by FHA in this area has been carried out under provisions which authorize owner-occupant borrowers to be lent up to 95 percent of the first $7000 and 70 percent of the next $4000 of a home's cost—with a maximum mortgage total of $9450.

What new move does is to "activate" Section 203 2(b) 2(d) of FHA's mortgage insurance provisions—the section which offers the most favorable terms for small-home financing, and a section which has never been utilized in this area.

By making the terms of this section more liberal, "a considerable amount of home building can be done under it," Clarke Daniel, president of the Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Washington, said yesterday.

Up to now, according to Thomas C. Barringer, director of the District Insuring Office, mortgage insurance has not been sought here under the section because its limits have been too low.

Old and New Limits

THE FOLLOWING table lists the revisions in maximum mortgages:

Mortgagor	Type	Maximum Mortgage	New Maximum Mortgage	Former Limit
Owner-Occupant	2 BR.	$7600	$8650

RFC Loans $125,000

Parking Skyscraper Starts Soon

THE Reconstruction Finance Corporation has approved a $125,000 loan to Parking Services, Inc., it was learned yesterday, which will result in construction of a 16-story automatic parking garage at 1426 K st. nw.

Plans of the structure have just been handed the District Government for its okay. Officials of the parking firm said yesterday they expect the plans to be approved shortly. Work is scheduled to begin about August 15.

The building, a two-elevator edifice which will rise 130 feet in the air, will park 72 cars. It will have a 25-foot frontage on K st. and a depth of 63 feet. Here's how it will work:

Cars will pull into the entrance and the driver will get out. Then a dolly-like "car-positioner" will roll them into the elevators and they will be lifted to whichever floor is desired. It's all done by pushbutton control.

Once at the proper floor, the car-positioner will roll the auto into its stall. From start to finish, the operation can be handled by one attendant. The system is reversed to bring cars down to the street.

Dezendorf, who planned and ran the District's first parking lot in 1929 and now has several here, said he has been trying for the past 14 years to put over an automatic parking garage. Structures of this type, he avowed, are the answer to the downtown District's parking difficulties.

Actually, the building will cost in the neighborhood of $200,000. The difference between that amount and the $125,000 RFC loan will be made up through sale of the firm's stock and by persons connected with the company, Dezendorf said.

Sub-bids are being taken for the project now. Estimated date of completion is around December 1.

Officials of the company are confident of gaining the approval of the District Government. They point to the fact that some 20 building regulations have had to be changed to permit construction of the unusual building.

For instance, maximum height of a building here is 110 feet, and not more than 10 stories.

The automatic parking garage, however, will be permitted to rise 130 feet — with 16 floors above ground and two beneath—because it will have no human occupation.

For the same reason, a sprinkler system is not needed above the first floor, no elevator doors are required, and so on. Too, the District Government has agreed to permit an aisle to be cut through the island on K st. in front of the building. This will allow cars to turn off K st. into the garage entrance.

Possibilities of the structure have been recognized by the District Motor Vehicle Agency. In a letter on file with the RFC, Agency Chairman Charles M. Upham writes:

"We are particularly interested in your 'Park-O-Mat' design, since it is capable of using small, odd-size parcels of land in 'hot spot' locations. In this way it will be possible . . . to strike at the very heart of the critical downtown area."

Parking Services has the exclusive franchise for the car positioner in the District, Baltimore and Philadelphia. "What we need here," said Dezendorf, "is a lot of small garages strategically located." Not all automatic elevator-type garages, either.

The automatic type has a special use, he declared. It is best fitted for congested business districts. It should be a component of office buildings, to which it is easily adaptable. The various office structures under construction in downtown Washington, he said, have knocked out parking spaces for 2100 cars daily.

And, he added, they've "generated parking demand" five times over what it was.

Jaken Bucket Gets a Cooling Role

New York (AP).—New York's water shortage, which put a stop to utomobile washing, use of swimming pools and various other facilies, seriously handicapped some of the city's big air conditioning nstallations.

Auto laundries got around legal restrictions by drilling artesian vells. Now the Gross-Morton Corp., building a 3000-family garden partment project, is sinking a well to provide water for the air-onditioning of its Glen Oaks shopping center in Queens borough. ixty stores will be air cooled by the independent water supply.

Home Building 'Biggest Boon' To June Construction Record

NEW YORK (AP).—Heavy engineering contract awards in June set a new record for any month—peace or war, according to Engineering News-Record.

The June total of $1,253,720,000 closed out the greatest first half in construction history, the engineering construction weekly said. It reported the January to June total of $5,665,066,000 was 44 percent over the first 1949 half and 15 percent over the previous record first half, in 1942.

Housing projects, highways and bridges contract awards all were at new highs in June.

Compared with the first half of 1949, private contract awards totaling $3,234,378,000 for the first six months this year were 71 percent ahead of last year. Public works at $2,430,688,000 were up 19 percent, Federal contracts at $715,813,000 were up 29 percent and State and municipal contracts at $1,714,875,000 were up 15 percent.

"Biggest boon to 1950 construction is housing," the publication said. "Large-scale housing projects contracts are more than double last year (up 114 percent). This is a main driving force sending waterworks and commercial building also to new highs, and keeping sewerage contracts at last year's record rate."

The cumulative total of awards for the first 27 weeks of 1950 came to $5,879,445,000, or 44 percent higher than the like period last year.

Of the latest week's total, $107,171,000 was for private contracts, and $107,128,000 for public contracts.

32 College Park Houses Slated

Permit has been issued for construction of 32 homes in the 5100 and 5200 blocks of Mineola rd., College Park, Md. Builder-owner is Albert W. Turner, 1610 Overlook dr., Silver Spring.

The houses will be one-story in height, with basement, and of frame construction. They are to be 30 by 24 feet in dimension.

13 Houses Planned

Permit application has been filed to build 13 houses in the 5700 block of Kingswood rd. and the 9900 block of Broad st. in Bethesda.

Builder is Carl M. Freeman, Inc., 1013 15th st. nw. The houses are to be brick and cinderblock construction, one story in height. Dimensions are 36 by 33 feet each.

Permit Issued For 42 Dwellings

Gelman-Woodlawn, Inc., 2730 Wisconsin ave. nw., will build 42 one-story homes in the 4900 block of 71st st. and the 6900 blocks of Decatur and Greenvale sts., Woodlawn, Hyattsville.

Owner is Woodlawn Homes Corp., in care of the builder. The dwellings are to be 35 by 28 feet in dimension. Permit has been issued.

18 One-Story Homes Planned in Chillum

Humphrey and Quigg, 27 Carroll ave., Takoma Park, plan to construct 18 one-story houses in the 3300 blocks of Rutgers and Stanford sts., and the 7600 block of Wells blvd., Chillum. The brick and cinderblock dwellings, for which a permit has been issued, are to be 41 by 26 feet in size.

FHA Boosts Area Mortgage Ceilings

sions for small homes in outlying and suburban areas, maximum limits for owner-occupant have been raised from $4750 to $5600, and for operator-builder from $4250 to $5000.

Barringer listed two main reasons why FHA declared Greater Washington a high cost area:

1. The going rate for union labor here averages out to slightly more than $2.48 an hour, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The $2.48 hourly wage is the fifth highest of the 85 most populous cities in this country.

2. The fact that the previous mortgage insurance limits under Section 203 2(b) 2(d) have proved too low. "If we'd had even a half dozen applications for mortgage insurance under these limits, FHA would have had an indication that costs weren't too high here," Barringer observed. "But we've never had any applications whatsoever."

As an indication of costs in Greater Washington, he cited a recent survey which showed that a certain type of house proving extremely popular on Long Island, N. Y., is being built and sold there for $7990. To duplicate the house in this area would cost from $9656 to $10,200.

Getting back to union labor costs, the official said that the only cities topping Greater Washington are Newark, N. J., New York City, Cleveland and Philadelphia.

Average hourly wages here, according to BLS findings, are: Bricklayers, $3; carpenters, $2.50; electricians, $2.70; painters, $2.30; plasterers, $3; plumbers, $2.50, and laborers, $1.45.

Jurisdictions in the high cost area are the District, Alexandria and Falls Church, and Arlington, Fairfax, Montgomery and Prince Georges counties. Greater Washington is the second area in the United States to be declared high cost. New York City was pronounced a high cost area last month.

30 Years to Pay

IN MAKING the announcement, the District Insuring Office explained that the two revised sections permit the owner-occupant mortgagor to get a top loan for home construction of 95 percent of FHA's appraised value. He has up to 30 years to pay off the loan.

The operator-builder may obtain a maximum loan of 85 percent of appraised value with the same maturity period.

"This means, for example, under Section 203 2(b) 2(d), that for a three-bedroom house, where the purchase price is as low as $9000 including the land and the FHA appraised value is the same, upon payment of $450 (exclusive of closing charges), an acceptable owner-occupant mortgagor may obtain a 30-year mortgage at 4¼ percent interest.

"FHA will insure the balance mortgage for the balance of the purchase price in the amount of $8550."

Avoid Legal Tangle

Deed to Home Should Rest in Both Names

"HAVE the title or deed to your home recorded jointly in the name of husband and wife. It's as important as life and fire insurance."

That is the advice of the Construction Research Bureau, national clearing house for building information, after conducting a survey among attorneys and mortgage lenders who have seen countless families suffer needlessly in case of death or of lawsuits over debts.

In most States, joint ownership is possible and in such cases husband and wife are called "tenants by entireties." If one dies, the other owns the house. No will, no estate administration and, in most States, no inheritance tax is required.

In Case of Creditors

FURTHERMORE, should one of the "tenants by entirety" be sued, creditors cannot take over the house, although in the half-dozen or so community property States, a widow might find herself half-owner of the home with creditors owning the other half.

The time to take the precaution of joint ownership is when the home is purchased, according to the bureau.

If the house is already owned in the husband's name alone, ownership can be changed by a new deed, but should the husband have debts, care must be taken that the change does not have the legal effect of a fraud upon creditors.

If a couple buys a house jointly before they are married, the subsequent wedding will not protect them. Therefore a new deed should be drawn after marriage in the name of "John Doe and Mary Doe, his wife, as tenants by the entireties."

Israelis Face Housing Racket

Tel Aviv, Israel (AP)—Housing racketeers are getting rich quick in this little state of Israel. They're demanding and collecting huge sums for "key money." The government winks at it. Recipients of "key money" are required to show the amount in their income tax returns. Rents are reasonable in Israel. Their ceilings are fixed by the municipalities. But getting the key to where you're going to live requires a pay-off that often runs into many thousands of dollars.

There's an acute shortage of housing, so prices keep climbing via the "key money" route. Anywhere from $5,600 to $8,400—in cash and on the spot—usually is the tenant's price for getting out. He says he splits it with the landlord. —LA

MOPPING THE FLOOR with this new, self-wringing sponge mop "will keep Milady looking glamorous while she speeds through household duties," according to the Bureau of Industrial Service, Inc., 285 Madison ave., New York 17, N. Y. The built-in squeezer means "no wet hands," reports the bureau, and the cellulose fibers of the sponge soak up 20 times their own weight in water. Introduced by O-Cedar, the new mop is to be available in department stores shortly, the bureau says.

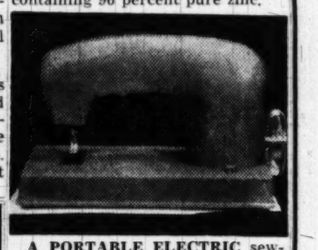
THERE IS a concentration of new products this week in the "keeping things from" classification.

Among them are new products for keeping rabbits from eating your garden, keeping oilcan spouts from breaking, keeping from running over things on a bicycle at night, and keeping iron and steel from rusting.

THE B. F. GOODRICH Chemical Co. of Cleveland, O., is the maker of the chemical used to cause rabbits to turn away from your garden in disgust. It is called No-Nib'l and it can be dusted or sprayed.

THE NON-BREAKABLE spouts for cans of oil, lighter fluids and other liquids are made of Bakelite's polyethylene plastic by the West Penn Oil Co. of Warren, Pa. The spouts bend and snap right back again. They come in colors, too. To open, just puncture or cut the tip; close by replacing the threaded cap.

A BRITISH-DEVELOPED cold galvanizing compound to protect iron and steel from rust is being marketed in this country by the Zinkrich Co. of New York. The company says the compound can be applied by brush, spray or by dipping. Application results in formation of a metallic grey coating containing 96 percent pure zinc.



A PORTABLE ELECTRIC sewing machine, weighing 11½ pounds, will be available in September at $49.50, according to Erie Products Company, 446 New Center Building, Detroit 2, Mich. The machine has a dust-proof mechanism, built-in light, rheostat foot control, built-in thread spool and operating mechanism and other features.

THE HAYWOOD Manufacturing Co. of Denver, Col., has perfected a machine for making a knotless, tapered fishing leader of DuPont nylon monofilament. DuPont said it took two years of experimenting to perfect the process. The leaders come in 6, 7½ and 9-foot lengths in several degrees of taper without knots.

Plan New House With Care To Avoid 'Cell-Like' Rooms

ROOM size, important to the family's comfort, efficiency and happiness, is sometimes slighted in planning a house.

In today's small homes, particularly, rooms can be like cells unless opened up by the omission of partitions, or by use of semi-partitions, or by using large areas of glass to lend the illusion of spaciousness.

By merging room areas, dual-purpose rooms have come into prominence. Perhaps the commonest these days is the combination living-dining room.

How to determine in advance the size of rooms in a new house can be aided by measuring present rooms and furniture. A standard sofa projects about 30 inches to 36 inches from the wall; a dropleaf diningtable measures about 38 inches by 48 inches; and so on.

Allowance must be made in figuring each room size for easy traffic flow or circulation of people from room to room, or within the room itself; and for arrangements of furniture.

A living-room must be of adequate size for family use, for entertaining guests, and for proper use of space. It must have wall space adequate for large pieces like piano and breakfront. Bedrooms must afford maximum privacy and comfort.

Size of the kitchen is determined by the size of the family and its way of life. If there are frequent guests and parties, a larger kitchen is required. A kitchen that is narrow and cramped may make it impossible for two people to work there together.

The over-sized kitchen may burden the homemaker with upkeep and extra steps required between stove, refrigerator and cabinets.

Although a standard bathtub and plumbing fixtures may be contained in a bath-room as small as five feet by five feet, this will be too small to be practical. The minimum practical size for a bath-room is five by seven feet.

Clothes closets should be at least two feet deep to accommodate regulation garment bags, two feet four inches being a good depth. More than this has no advantage until this depth is doubled, or is at least four feet eight inches.

Small Fry Get a Break

Chicago (AP)—Workmen have dug a wide, deep pit at Clark and Randolph sts., the site of a new bus depot. The area has been surrounded by a high fence. There are screened windows at intervals so that men and women can watch the construction crew. There also are a couple of openings at lower levels. They are marked by signs that read: "Junior Engineers."

218 Acres

Record Glass Installations Scheduled

ENOUGH glass will go into Greater Washington homes and offices this year to cover about 218 acres of ground.

So reports Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Co., which has just completed a survey here. The glass that will be installed by the end of the year is a record amount, according to Hunter Harrison, Washington field representative for distributor sales.

The survey shows that 9,500,000 square feet of various types of glass will be installed, Harrison said. Plate glass will exceed one million square feet for the second year in a row, while window glass installations will reach a record eight million square feet.

In addition, he reported, obscure or frosted glass will top the 400,000 square feet mark this year. Thermopane (double panes of glass with a sealed-in air space for picture windows) will exceed 100,000 square feet.

Permit Issued

Riggs Development Corp., 5200 Georgia ave. nw., has been given a permit to build 20 two-story homes in the 800 block of Berkshire dr., Hampshire Heights, Md. Size of the houses is to be 21 by 25 feet.

Rental Surplus Seen

James L. Taylor, Philadelphia realtor, reports of signs of a surplus of rental housing units in the current issue of the monthly publication of the Society of Residential Appraisers.

Here's the Word on Picture Windows

This is the second in a series of 12 releases by Southwest Research Institute devoted to explaining to the home buying public what standards of quality to look for in a house built for sale.

WINDOWS OR GLASS WALLS?

THE definite trend toward "picture windows" and large glass areas in American home design is not something that can be evaluated on a purely economic basis.

Practically everyone is enthusiastic about big windows and it thus becomes an emotional factor that cannot be considered merely in dollars and cents, according to the Southwest Research's Revere Quality House Division.

John Hancock Callender, architectural consultant for the institute, points out that the size of windows is one of the most conspicuous differences between houses of traditional design and those of contemporary design.

In the typical small house of Cape Cod or other traditional ancestry, windows are small and usually placed symmetrically. In some contemporary houses, however, windows may occupy the entire wall from floor to ceiling. An expanse of glass like this can no longer be termed a window, so the phrase "window-wall" or "glass-wall" has come into use.

"Not many people have had an opportunity to visit a house of real contemporary design, but those who have are usually enthusiastic about the big "window-walls" that open on secluded gardens or terraces," Callender says.

"They appreciate the large glass areas, but are somewhat worried as to their practicality. A prospective home buyer justifiably wonders about the cost, and whether the house can be heated comfortably and economically with so large an expanse of glass.

Costs Outlined

"GLASS, while far less precious than it was centuries ago, is still a luxury. Glass walls can easily cost more than conventional wall construction and large sheets of plate glass are more expensive than ordinary windows. And if special sealed double glass is used, the cost is still further increased.

"However," Callender points out, "glass manufacturers are pushing the use of large double-glazed windows that have a high degree of builder acceptance. These multiple windows are made up of units approximately two feet high by four feet wide consisting of top sealed sheets of flat glass.

"This type of glass runs about two dollars a square foot in place which is a most reasonable figure."

To the cost of the "glass-wall" must be added the cost of the shades, curtains, and draperies required for controlling light and privacy. These items may cost almost as much as the glass itself. Windows are frequently more expensive than walls not only in first cost, but also in maintenance. Glass as well as shades and draperies require frequent cleaning and occasional replacement.

In the heating season, more than four times as much heat is lost through a window as through an uninsulated wall. When the walls are insulated the loss through the windows may be ten times that throught the walls. These ratios may be cut in half, however, by the use of special double glass, Southwest Research Institute points out.

On the credit side of the ledger is the natural light obtained from windows which often eliminates the cost of artificial light for daytime use. Also on the credit side is the sun heat that comes through windows during winter.

Using Solar Heat

IN the case of an entire south wall of glass, sufficient heat from the sun may be admitted to keep the room comfortable without resort to artificial heat even when the outside temperature is at zero. Such a design results in a considerable savings in fuel costs.

Unfortunately the sun does not always shine—even in the daytime—and when the sun is not shining the large glass area loses heat.

The result is that a house designed this way needs heat in large quantities at specific times and may require a larger heating plant than a conventional house, although the annual fuel bill may be considerably lower.

Since glass is a trap for heat from the sun, the problem in the summertime is keeping the sun out. A modest roof overhang over a south window will cut off almost all of the rays of the high summer sun and not interfere with the low winter sun.

West windows are a problem as far as summer sun is concerned. By afternoon the sun is too low to be intercepted by a roof overhang. Perhaps the best solution is the use of trees or other natural growth to shade the west wall of the house on summer afternoons.

For protection from the almost horizontal rays of the late afternoon sun a vertical trellis supporting deciduous vines can be utilized. The advantage of deciduous trees and vines as shades is that they give protection when needed in the summer, but in the winter they let the sun pass through them and into the house where it is welcome, Callender says.

Quality Homes Built at Low Cost-No 'Frills'

Low-Price Houses Have High-Price Appeal

These three homes near LaPorte, Ind., were built by a local contractor for $10,000 or less each. Lots averaging 75 by 200 feet cost an additional $1000. The contractor, C. H. Goodall, says he saved on construction costs by cutting out the frills

LAPORTE, IND.—A local contractor has built a group of homes in this northern Indiana town which could be the answer to the continuing heavy demand for high quality housing in the lower price range.

Designer, contractor and supervisor of construction work was C. H. Goodall, who says he chose this Chicago-area community because he believes it to be a typical suburban town with at least average wage rates and material costs. He feels that the houses could be duplicated almost anywhere else in the country at comparative costs.

His homes sold between $7500 and $12,000. Large lots, attractively landscaped, cost an additional $1000. Each dwelling was planned separately, tailored to fit the lot and carefully oriented to take advantage of the sun and pleasing views.

According to Goodall, there is no magic in building a good house to sell for $10,000 or even $7500.

"I designed them with the idea of cutting costs wherever possible. More important, I cut out the frills—methods and materials that add cost but don't contribute much to a home's livability."

Consider the Lester Diedrich home. It is a rambling, ranch-style house that most observers would place in the $15,000 to $20,000 price class. Actually it was built for $10,000.

It has three bedrooms, living room, study, kitchen and dinette. There is an attached garage and ample storage space in the attic. It has no basement.

Not counted as one but just as valuable as any room is a patio on the south side of the house. This is enclosed by the house itself on three sides and a low wall on the other. The wall protects the privacy of those seated in the patio and adjoining living room.

The living room has three large windows on its south side, overlooking the patio. These windows admit a flood of sunlight from the low-hanging winter sun which provides an important source of heat. A roof overhang above the windows helps prevent the summer sun, which is higher in the sky, from entering the room.

Goodall feels he saved money with his window wall construction.

"Look at it this way," he explains. "With a conventional wall you have labor and material cost for brickwork, sillwork, plastering and painting, all in addition to the usual glazing costs. With floor-to-ceiling windows you eliminate the first four expenses entirely. Furthermore, when you use double glass you get a built-in storm sash with insulating efficiency as great as many nontransparent wall materials."

Most of his homes are radiant heated, oil-fired. With thorough insulation in floor, walls and ceiling in addition to window areas, the fuel bills are running surprisingly low. One owner reported a winter fuel bill of less than $90.

Nation's Mortgage Business Jumps 30% Over Last Year

DURING the first four months of 1950, the volume of mortgages of under $20,000 made in the Nation reached an estimated $4,420,000,000, according to William K. Divers, chairman of the Home Loan Bank Board.

The figure is confined to recorded nonfarm mortgages and chiefly represents loans on homes, he said. The aggregate for the period was 30 percent greater than in the same months last year and 17 percent above the previous peak total for those months, reported in 1948.

The boom in the real estate market has regained strength over the country, as indicated by increases in mortgages recorded in all of the 11 Federal Home Loan Bank regions, Divers reported. Compared with the 1949 period, rises in recordings ranged from 16 percent in the Boston district to 39 percent in the Topeka district.

Increases of 23 percent to 38 percent were also reported in the New York, Greensboro (N. C.), Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago, Des Moines and San Francisco regions.

Watch That Color!

Choose Your Wall Paint as You Would a New Hat

HERE'S one for the "What'll they think of next?" file.

Many interior decorators nowadays are advising customers to select wall colors for the home that will "provide an attractive background for your hair and complexion."

So reports the National Paint, Varnish and Lacquer Association.

Decorators, the association observes, know the colors that will set off the blonde, the brunette, and the redhead to the greatest advantage. And so do some women:

"Picking out the right color for the walls of a room is a lot like picking out the right color for a dress or hat. Often women select colors instinctively that are in agreement with their color types."

Since all women may not be so fortunate, the association has pointed the way to that happy combination of the right wall color and the—the redhead, for instance:

"With the Titian-haired type, much depends on the particular shade and on whether her skin is fair or more richly tinted. In general, pure reds, blues, yellows, greens and oranges are too intense. Softer and more subtle shades of these colors—in medium tones—are satisfactory.

"Delicate greens, dull greens and olive greens are effective. Darker shades of red hair permit the harmonious use of deeper and richer wall colors. For the softer-tinted Titian types, pastel colors are successful, but they should have character. Very pale ivory or cream should be avoided."

Having vanquished the redheads' problem, the association offers advice for women with other shades of hair:

"The brown-haired woman has a choice of any basic hue, provided it is toned to agree with her particular brown. In most cases, she is wise to avoid the somber browns, the grayish shades and all dark hues. Almost any bright color will set off a brunette's dark hair and complexion, but it should be a clear tone that is full of life.

"Many pastel colors—if they are definite and not too pale—are appropriate as wall colors for a brunette, but strong hues should appear with them in the room's accessories.

"An olive-skinned brunette can have richer, darker colors than her lighter-complexioned sisters, but Jeanie - with - the-light-brown-hair should sidestep dark wall colors as well as the very pale and neutral hues. Her surroundings should feature colors of medium depth that emhpasize—or contrast with—the light or reddish tints in her hair.

"Blonde hair may easily appear a lustreless hay color under the influence of wall colors that are too strong or too crude. A blonde really looks her best against a background of subtly mixed hues . . . soft turquoise, rich, deep green, red-orange, or the soft blues—including Wedgwood. Yellows are not good, although they may appear in small amounts in the furnishings.

"The lovely lady with white or graying hair looks well against a background of the fashionable flame red in a medium—not too light—tint. Otherwise selections are coffee brown, soft reddish-orange, blue, soft green, or blue-green."

Magical Lamp Bulb Clears Atmosphere

CLEVELAND.—That fresh, clean smell which prevails out of doors during an electrical storm is being reproduced indoors on a small scle by means of a small lamp bulb being introduced here by General Electric's lamp department.

Ozone, a form of oxygen, is the substance created by nature which has the effect of neutralizing many objectionable odors, according to G-E engineers. Now it is produced at the flick of a switch by a new, four-watt lamp which is designed to dispel unwanted odors. This lamp bulb is expected to find use in many cases where a deodorizing effect is desired.

A glass ball less than an inch and a half in diameter, the new lamp bulb gives off the just barely noticeable concentrations of ozone which are useful in making the presence of odors less perceptible.

It operates on household current, and is used with a ballast in a simple fixture which allows the free escape of ozone, but shields the eyes from the ultraviolet energy generated by the lamp.

Although they are expected to find public acceptance in homes, offices, and other living and work-areas, the first ozone lamps to be produced are being acquired by manufacturers of automatic clothes dryers.

They are being built into dryers to give clothes the odor as well as the appearance of cleanliness. The bulbs also are being built into refrigerators and beverage vending machines.

The ozone produced by one lamp bulb is sufficient to mask odors in areas up to 1000 cubic feet. The lamps have a mild germicidal effect, according to engineers.

Mud House Goes Swanky

Singapore (AP).—A Singapore Chinese businessman hopes to revolutionize the building industry here if authorities will let him use "ersalime", a mixture of earth, sand and lime, in place of cement. Ersalime-retaining walls along the banks of the Swatow River in South China, which C. M. Lee saw 55 years ago, have inspired him to plan houses of the same material here. He would use cement for pillars.

Lee says the river bank walls served their purpose for over 50 years and would probably serve for another 100 years. He said he built a wall of ersalime and when he pulled it down six years later for inspection, found it to be in perfect condition.

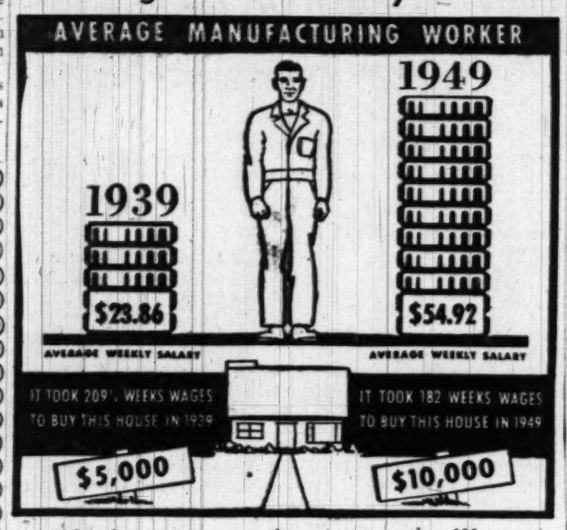
Getting Easier To Buy a Home



Although construction costs have risen more than 100 percent since 1939, it is easier for the average manufacturing worker to buy a house now than in pre-Pearl Harbor days. The National Association of Home Builders says that $54.92 per week salary takes only 182 weeks' wages to buy today's $10,000 house. Ten years ago, on a $23.86 salary, it required 209½ weeks' wages to buy the $5000 house

Planning a Child's Room? Here Are a Few Ideas

IF YOU'RE puzzling over how to set up a nursery for the latest addition to your family, or a room for your preschool youngsters—girl or boy—this is for you.

For a nursery, try to select a room that has cross ventilation in summer and sunshine in winter. Choose light colors for the walls for a cheerful background and use washable paints for easy cleaning.

Along with a bathinette and crib for your nursery, you'll need a wardrobe or chest for clothes and space for toys and books. A comfortable chair without arms will give you elbow room when you're dressing a lively infant.

For your preschool boy or girl, create a room that sparkles with imagination and color. The walls can be painted deeper tones than in the nursery. You'll want walls that make good color backgrounds for vivid fabrics and accessories. Some examples are pale yellows, clear blues and greens, soft shades of rose and ivory. Woodwork, these days, is often enameled to match the walls.

When it comes to furniture, you can cut down old pieces to child size. You can, for instance, shorten the legs of an old dining room table. Cut down chairs to fit the table and you've created an ideal spot for tea parties and clay modeling.

Arrange a 'Summer' Room For Summer Stay-at-Homes

FEW FAMILIES can move to mountains or beach for the summer. Most must make do with their year-round homes, and it takes all the tricks a home-maker can devise to keep cool in sultry weather.

If space permits, a room arranged especially for summer relaxation is a comfort. This may be a spare bedroom, the sun room, or the living room itself. If it can be completely transformed, with summery window and floor treatment, summer furniture and decorations, it will be enjoyed more fully.

The furniture should be made to look as different as possible from its winter version. A well-known decorator, Dorothy Draper, suggests slipcovers of white cotton toweling or terry cloth, available by the yard. It is cool, washable and inexpensive.

Select a pleasant theme for the summer room. Choose an appealing motif and follow it through.

A seashore room might have painted sea-green walls; floor of asphalt tile in the sea-green, bordered with tiles having cut-out pictures of fishnet curtains hung with loops of fish-line; furniture slipcovered in white terry cloth.

Too, pink and coral sea-shells piled on the coffee table, a ship model in the bookshelves, and a pair of ship's lanterns over the mantel suggest the seashore.

Such a room will have everything except beach sand, and when the youngsters troop in from their sandpile, sand will come in with them. But the room can take it. Everything in it will be soil- and moisture-resistant.

Walls and slipcovers will wash; the floor can be mopped clean instantly. In the fall, store the slipcovers and curtains until next year, and the room is ready to be converted to its more formal winter appearance.

Marketing Costs Study Slated

THE costs of marketing building materials will be studied by the University of Pennsylvania under a research contract with the Housing and Home Finance Agency, Raymond M. Foley, administrator, announced last week.

The study is part of the research program being conducted by HHFA through its division of housing research in an endeavor to reduce costs of housing.

Research will be carried out in the Philadelphia metropolitan area and in one or more other cities. Cooperation of builders, dealers, and manufacturers will be sought by the university. Pertinent statistical and other information on such matters as prices, margins, and dealers' expenses will be collected and analyzed.

Objectives are to determine the relation which the costs of marketing bear to the cost of the delivered building materials, and the relation which the costs of marketing of the materials in a house bear to the total construction cost of the house.

Army Sets Up Liver Research Center Here

An Army center for studies in diseases of the liver is being set up here, it was announced recently by Maj. Gen. Paul H. Streit.

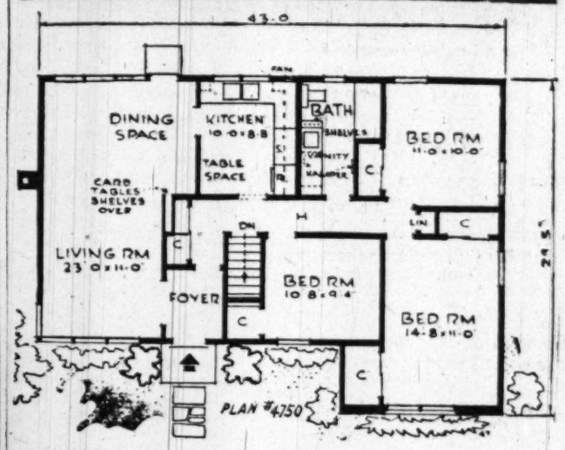
The new hepatic and metabolic center replaces one formerly situated at Valley Forge General Hospital, Phoenixville, Pa., which closed to patients on May 30.

Streit, commanding general of the Army Medical Center, said that a 10-bed ward and laboratory unit are being prepared in Walter Reed Hospital for the new section, and that related research will be carried on in the center's medical school.

Special research with such drugs as ACTH, aureomycin and terramycin will be carried out on infectious hepatitis, the epidemic form of jaundice. Other research studies are planned on many diseases involving the liver, and metabolic changes caused by flash burns, irriadiation and other injuries.

Clinicial director of the special section will be Dr. Victor M. Sborov, assisted by Lieut. Donald A. Sutherland, Capt. Florence Berger, dietician for the new unit, is now undergoing special training at Columbia University.

Feature-Filled for $11,000



This home's plan was worked out from a list of features asked for most frequently. Cost controlled the extent to which features were incorporated, but such demands as ease of circulation, open planning, adequate storage and low rambling lines were carried out.

The result is what the Small Homes Guide calls "The Home America Needs." The plan covers 1114 square feet. It has been construction-tested on a 1000-house project at Forest City, Wantagh, Long Island, N. Y., where it was sold for $11,000 on a lot 100 by 60 feet.

Two-Family Home Reported Popular As Investment

THE TWO-FAMILY home is making a rapid comeback for the home buyer and investor dollar, a leading real estate agent reported today.

N. G. Frederick, head of Frederick Real Estate, said several homes in a 300-unit project of duplex homes in Riggs Manor Estates, at Ager and Riggs rds., in nearby Maryland, have been purchased as investments. Master Builders, Inc., is the builder.

Some owner-investors will reside in one unit and rent out the second; others will rent out both units, he reported. About 80 percent of the homes will have two bedrooms. Each will sell for $12,950. The remainder will have three bedrooms and will sell for $13,250.

Frederick said the duplex type of construction is regaining favor with builders because it offers them a chance to provide more housing at less cost to buyers.

How to Make Summer Housework Easier

NOW that summer is getting established, a few tips pointing the way to easing housekeeping chores are in order.

To lighten summer tasks, put away cloth curtains and draperies until fall. In their place hang roll-up shades of split reed or rush. They fit into any room and are cool because they keep out the sun but don't shut out the breeze.

Too, summer rugs of woven rush or hemp squares are work-savers, and cool split reed or rattan chairs are appropriate indoors or outdoors.

Keep table linens, laces and organdies for special occasions only, and use natural-color straw mats that don't require washing. They wipe off or brush clean if food is spilled on them, and are inexpensive and durable. They are also appropriate for outdoor table-settings.

Pottery casseroles and oven dishes are available that go straight from oven to table. This saves serving time, as well as the washing of separate serving dishes.

Another summer short-cut is in the washing of glassware. Wash it in a mild soapsuds solution in comfortably hot water. A few drops of ammonia or bluing in the rinse water will bring out the luster.

There are two schools of thought about the drying. One holds that glasses should be dried immediately with a lint-free towel and then polished with a clean dry cloth. The other believes that after glasses are washed and rinsed, they dry better alone, and this makes a good summer work-saver.

Glass Takes Simmer Out of Sun Porch

WHO wants a sun porch in the summer time?

Well, a sun porch needn't be unbearable in hot weather if the owner makes use of certain new developments in glass. It's lack of summer insulation in large glass areas that causes many sun porches to become uncomfortable in summer.

Ordinary single glass windows admit a considerable amount of solar heat the year around. With single glazing, in other words, it is often necessary to get too much heat in the summer in order to have enough sun in the winter.

Naturally, a large amount of unwanted heat will pass through any conventional window. However, a lot of the convected and conducted heat can be excluded if windows are double-glazed. A practical way of handling this problem is to have large window areas glazed with Thermopane insulating glass.

Such a unit with its two layers of quarter-inch plate glass and a half-inch space of dry air sealed between them will keep out nearly half of the convected and conducted summer heat.

Frosted Aklo glass is effective in the roof of sun porch or studio where direct sunlight is a problem. The blue-green glass reduces the input of solar heat. It also reduces sun glare and admits an even, diffused light that is restful on the eyes.

These special types of glass can prove economical, too. When used in conjunction with air conditioning they will reduce the load on the cooling unit.

This sun porch is as pleasant in summer as in winter. Glass in the windows, interior partition and French doors is Thermopane, a double-paned insulating unit which reduces the input of heat in summer and cold in winter. Glass in the roof is Blue Ridge Aklo. It's blue-green color filters the sun's rays, admits an even light with a minimum of heat and glare

'50 Building Cost $26 Billion

NEARLY 26 billion dollars will be spent on new construction this year, according to revised Federal estimates released recently.

In a report on the anticipated construction outlay, the Commerce Department's construction division and the Labor Department's bureau of labor statistics also observed that the $26 billion outlay is "predicated on no significant change in the international situation."

The unprecedented construction spending, it was announced, is forecast on the basis of record-breaking activity during the first half of the year—"and indications that the last half will see virtually no let-up in the current building boom."

The $26 billion figure anticipated for 1950 is 14 percent above the revised estimate of $22.6 billion spent in 1949. During the first half of the year, expenditures for all types of new construction ran 17 percent above the corresponding period in 1949.

A seasonal downturn in construction activity is expected in the late fall and winter this year, in contrast with last year's contra-seasonal increase, particularly in homebuilding, according to the report.

So far this year, outlays for new private nonfarm housing are 48 percent above the 1949 first-half volume. Expenditures for hospitals, schools and reclamation and flood control projects also are substantially higher but highway construction is at about the same level as last year.

Private outlays for new dwelling construction for the entire year 1950 are expected to total about $10 billion, compared with $7.3 billion last year. Expenditures for public housing will be slightly above 1949.

Indications are that close to 1,250,000 new buildings (including about 50,000 public housing units) will be placed under construction in 1950, surpassing by far the 1949 record of 1,026,000 and the previous high of 937,000 units in 1925.

The high level of construction activity that has prevailed since last fall has brought pressure on supplies of materials and skilled labor, it was noted.

'Obnoxious Growths' Cause the Backaches

Hoe's Still Chief Foe of the Weed

By James H. Beattie

KINDLY disposed writers refer to weeds as plants growing where they are not wanted, but the latest dictionaries call them by such terms as "an economically useless plant" and "an obnoxious growth."

Many plants that may have some real economic use are just plain weeds in your yards and gardens and they are responsible for the most of the backaches of the gardening season. We are inclined to accept the dictionary term of "an obnoxious growth" and take a look at some of the things that can be done to rid ourselves of these pests.

Weeds do not lend themselves to any one package simple solution, and they must be attached from several angles. Only two general plans of attack need to be considered, preventitive measures and direct control.

Old, neglected yards and gardens that have become infested with noxious weeds such as Bermuda grass, lambs quarter, purslane, wild lettuce, dandelion, the plantains and others must be tackled largely through direct control measures, but with new land and long-cultivated areas where weeds have been kept under control, the problem can be tremendously simplified by never allowing a weed to mature viable seed, or to spread through the agency of roots or stems.

Many weeds are now ripening seeds. These will be spread by the wind and otherwise. Destruction of these seed-bearing weeds now will save an immense amount of labor next season.

In most cases the easiest method is to destroy the plants long before they reach the seeding stage. Dandelion and plantains in the lawn may be expeditiously handled with the 2,4-D formulations provided the applications are not where the material will drift to broad-leaved plants. The hand removal of these plants before they reach the seeding stage provides large dividends in the form of labor saved by not allowing them to scatter their seeds to adjacent gardens and flower beds.

Cultivation

SOME form of cultivation is the home gardener's surest method for the control of weeds. Among the benefits of cultivation, the regulation of soil moisture, the control of surface erosion and the incorporation of humus and commercial fertilizer into the soil are of first importance. Freshly cultivated soil around the plants has a beneficial effect on their growth. Fortunately these practices also provide the best method for the control of weeds.

A very successful Beltsville gardener cultivates his entire garden as soon as the ground can be safely worked after every rain. Should rains fail to occur every few days he cultivates at least once each week thereby maintaining a fine soil mulch with its benefits. This practice never allows weeds to get a start.

The proper preparation of the garden before the planting of the fruits, vegetables or ornamentals will greatly simplify the task of cultivation. Under such conditions the light surface stirring of the soil is all that is necessary and often superior because it does not bring deeply buried weed seeds to the surface or interfere with the roots of the crops. Too many make the mistake of working deeply close to the plants. Potatoes, tomatoes, sweet corn and other garden crops are often seriously injured by the root pruning caused by too deep cultivation.

The best general rule to follow is to stir the soil only on the surface around the plants, somewhat deeper in the middles of the rows always remembering that the roots of most of the garden crops soon extend across the rows.

The removal of the soil from around the plants while destroying weeds is liable to be harmful to the plants. Covering the weeds by drawing soil from the spaces between the rows of plants is often effective in destroying weeds and placing fresh soil around the plants. The pulling of large weeds growing near the plants is liable to seriously disturb the vegetables. Cutting them at the surface of the soil is a better plan.

Mulching Effective

MULCHING the surface of the soil around each plant, as with tomatoes, in strips along each side of the rows as with carrots, or by completely covering the space between the rows provides partial control of weeds. Mulching requires some hand weeding, particularly in the rows themselves where it is most troublesome.

Straw, green grass, peat, coarse leafmold, asphaltum base paper and recently, aluminum sheets or other materials are used. Mulching with vegetable material, particularly sawdust, shavings and other undecomposed mulches should be accompanied by liberal fertilization with nitrate bearing mixtures. Deep mulching often causes the soil to remain excessively wet but this disadvantage becomes an advantage during periods of drouth. A mulching system that makes it possible to pull the mulch from around the plants during rainy periods is advantageous.

Chemical Killers

ALTHOUGH millions of acres are now being treated annually in the United States with chemical weed killers for the control of wild mustard, cockleburs, field bindweed and other pests, these materials must be used with extreme caution around the home yard.

The low volability esters of 2, 4-D are extensively employed for roadside spraying of poison ivy, honeysuckle and dandelion, wild onion, the plantains and other weeds in lawns but extreme care must be exercised to prevent the drift of the material to nearby sensitive plants.

Generally speaking, there are no new or spectacular chemical methods this year for the control of weeds in the home garden. The sharp garden hoe, the wheel hoe and other tools capable of completely stirring the soil to a depth of about an inch still provide the best means for keeping weeds under control.

Heavy mulch around tomatoes provides partial control of weeds

Ideal Time to Plant Beets, Carrots, Kale

By Alfred Putz

COMPARATIVELY few home gardeners realize that it takes more than spring sowings to get the most out of the vegetable plot. While some crops like tomatoes continue to bear right up to frost, most others are in prime condition for a relatively short time only and these include the root crops. When the majority of beets and carrots have reached edible size they should be used promptly. The remaining stragglers which have lagged behind in growth are not worth bothering with because they are bound to be of poor quality. Vegetables must grow quickly to be tender and tasty.

To hold on to a row of bush beans until the last pod is large enough for use is equally short-sighted. This also holds true for sweet corn and many other crops. How much better it is to give space to a succession crop.

The tendency to wait with harvesting until the produce is of full size deprives the home gardener of one of the greatest rewards of his work—quality. Beans of three-quarter length, beets 2 inches across, carrots soon after they are well-colored through, lettuce while still young and tender, peas before they harden, kohlrabi of half size—all are luxuries the home gardener can well afford. The small sacrifice in quantity is overwhelmingly offset by the yield of succession crop. Remember, too, that market prices usually rise toward the end of the season and just think of the saving where vegetables are stored for winter use.

Advice on Sowing

WHILE most gardeners are well-informed about the time for spring sowings, they are hazy about those to be made during the summer. Climatic conditions and the length of the growing season are the controlling factors. To figure the growing time from the maturity dates given on seed packets and in catalogues is sure to lead to many failures. These dates are reasonably correct for spring sowing, but that is all they are good for. With temperature conditions reversed when seeds are sown in summer, the plants follow a different pattern of growth. Where summers are hot, some crops must wait until cooler nights arrive or they will not amount to much.

Ideal for Carrots

RIGHT after the Fourth of July sow bush beans, beets, carrots, kale, kohlrabi, lettuce, mustard spinach, summer radish, rutabaga, summer squash and turnips. A sowing of Chinese cabbage and endive is especially important at this time.

July 10 is ideal for round beets, carrots, kale, kohlrabi and lettuce. All these should reach full size before frost. A sowing of bush beans, Chinese cabbage, mustard spinach, summer radishes, spinach and turnips also should still give good crops.

Bush beans sown August 1 are likely to outyield any earlier sowings. This also is the best time for mustard, spinach and turnips which are helped along by the cool nights which will be with us when the plants make their growth. Chinese cabbage, kale and mustard spinach still may be sown but the plants will not reach full size. If you are especially fond of peas, try a row now as the chances for a crop are good.

All summer sowings should be made a little deeper than in spring. Be sure to compact the soil above the seed or germination may be delayed. If the soil is dry at the time of sowing, open the furrows and let water from the hose run into them until wet 4 inches deep. Sow after the water has seeped away and cover with moderately dry soil. Use the flat end of the rake to bring the seeds and soil in close contact.

Spade It Up

IT always pays to spade the soil before a succession crop is sown and since most of the effect of the spring fertilizer application is likely to have worn off do not neglect to work a complete food into the soil. Four pounds of a 5-10-5 formula will suffice for 100 square feet unless you prefer to feed the plants by means of fertilizer bands or ribbons placed 4 inches away from the seed row on both sides and deposited a little deeper than the seed furrow will be.

If the weather remains dry after sowing, water well once a week or every 10 days to insure prompt and satisfactory germination. This is quite important as a delay in coming up might upset the entire schedule.

Thinning, weeding and cultivating are as necessary with summer sowings as with those made at any other time. Frequent shallow cultivation is particularly needed to preserve soil moisture.

Most crops maturing in the fall remain in good edible condition longer than those ready during the warmer summer weather. The cool weather slows up their activities without reducing the quality. But sweet corn will not be quite so sugary.

And the Work Was Great Fun

BLACKSBURG, VA., July 8 (AP).—Home gardens in Virginia last year brought an estimated net return of $13,890,000 or an average of $76.08 apiece for home gardens on the farm and $23.10 apiece for urban home gardens.

The estimates were made by J. L. Maxton, agricultural economist for the extension service at Virginia Tech. He estimated there were 200,000 home gardens —175,000 rural and 25,000 urban —in Virginia last year.

The farm gardens had an average size of a half acre, average cost including labor of $8.92, and an average value of products of $165. The estimates for urban gardens, with an average size of one tenth of an acre, were $21.90 for costs and products valued at $45.

How to Tell If Holly Will Produce Berries

YOU can determine whether your holly will bear berries next fall by examining the tiny white flowers in bloom now. Male and female flowers are on different trees. Only female hollies are berry-baring.

The female flower, according to Robert A. Bartlett of the Bartlett Tree Expert Co., has a green protrudence in the center, surrounded by four white pistils. The male flower has four yellow stamens and does not have a center core of green.

The charm of hollies is in the berries. Plant mostly pistillate specimens. One male holly will insure pollination of a number of female plants.

Cut Flowers

Flowers cut in the late afternoon or early morning with a sharp knife, and plunged at once into water, will keep well.

Look Ahead to Next Year

Watering Evergreens Now Will Pay Off Next Spring

By Katherine B. Pozer

EXPERIENCED gardeners have found that they must constantly look ahead not only to the coming weeks and months, but to next year if they are to have a really successful garden. This looking ahead pays in many ways. Not only in the growing of better flowers and plants but often in helping stretch the budget. In visiting gardens we find many new ideas that gardeners have tried out and which have proven time and money savers as well as making the garden more lovely.

Many plants are now preparing for next years bloom, and getting their buds set or making the growth which will produce next years flowers. It is advisable, if the weather is dry at this time, to water the azaleas and rhododendrons which are now setting their buds. The great beauty of this years dogwood was doubtless caused by the rainy weather of last June and July. So, if we do have dry weeks ahead spring flowering evergreens and shrubs should be watered.

Spring bulbs are much more beautiful when accompanied by the small spring blooms such as annual for-get-me-nots, English daisies and pansies. At this time the for-get-me-not seedlings can be found scattered through the garden. They should be taken up and transplanted to some out of the way spot to await resetting the beds for next years bloom. If there are no seedlings a package of seed will produce many plants.

Forget-Me-Nots

ONE of the most beautiful gardens we visited this year used the annual forget-me-nots in profusion as edgings for the flower beds. In one direction in the garden a band of the lovely small blue blossoms, a foot or more in width, was backed by a single line of tall creamy white Darwin tulips.

In the other direction a similar band of for-get-me-nots was accompanied by a planting of low double pink tulips. Pansies grew in profusion in this garden—the plants so tall and sturdy that sprays cut from them filled large bowls throughout the house. Both pansies and for-get-me-nots were home grown—the latter seedlings gathered from beds and along the garden walks.

English Daisies

LAST spring we heard some one who had been making the garden tours exclaim: "Have you seen what they have done to English daisies?" Fearful that something rather dreadful had happened to these favorite flowers, we immediately asked "What?" The answer was, "They have made them so big and beautiful!"

English daisies have been improved, and some are almost as large as asters. They are coming into popularity once more after being one of the more or less neglected flowers in the past few years. They are easily grown from seed.

A spare bed, no matter how small, is one of the most useful things in a garden. It can be used in so many ways to improve the "show beds." Seedlings such as we have mentioned can be planted there or reset until needed. It can be a place for growing some exhibition flowers for shows away from the often crowded quarters in other parts of the garden. It can be used to keep a supply of chrysanthemums to transplant when fall arrives. In it can be put the new lily bulbs until they have proved themselves immune from disease.

Last year we visited a garden where the lovely Coltness hybrid dahlias were being grown for the first time. These were grown from seed planted in spring in an out-door bed and transplanted when a few inches tall. They were a mass of brilliant bloom from June to frost. Recently, revisiting the garden we inquired about the dahlias and were told that at the end of the season some were dug and found to have quite large roots, each large enough to make several plants this year, and the roots which were left in the ground had survived the winter and were already blooming.

This seems an experiment well worth trying. Many people find fall dahlia digging too much of a chore and dispense with these lovely flowers for that reason. If the Coltness dahlias will survive the winter so much the better but new plants from seed each year seems an easy way and inexpensive way of having dahlias. The Coltness hybrids have a bushy plant about 2½ feet in height and have blooms about the size of a small teacup. They come double and single and in all the good dahlia colors. They can be purchased in pots at many of the local nurseries.

Annual Phlox

THE brilliant beauty of annuals and biennials at this time fill many gardens and fill the gaps left by the earlier masses of iris, peonies and other spring and early summer perennials. One of the most satisfactory of these is the annual phlox which has an extremely long season of bloom.

We found another gardening venture with these flowers which had proven to be most satisfactory. Very early in the summer we visited a garden and exclaimed over the brilliant beauty of a bed completely filled with the annual phlox. It was like a gay patchwork quilt and made a lovely companion for the nearby rose beds. These seeds had been planted last fall in this unused bed and had received no further care. The bed later was used for other purposes. The plants reset or given away but for several weeks they gave to this garden a gay and unforgettable note of beauty.

Over-Watering Destroys Lawns

Close Mowing Is Harmful

CLOSE MOWING and overwatering are often responsible for poor lawns in midsummer. If the soil is kept constantly moist, grass may lose vigor for lack of air in the soil and this loss of vigor may make the moisture of no benefit to it. Good drainage, and a porous surface which will admit air are the best protection against overwatering.

Frequent shallow sprinkling is even more dangerous on the lawn than in the flower and vegetable garden. Do not begin to water until the grass needs it, then soak the soil deeply at longer intervals.

Many good lawn grasses are destroyed by close mowing. The best height to set the mower is 1½ inches from the surface. To adjust the mower, place it on a level floor and measure the distance from the floor to the flat knife on which the reel cuts.

While grasses grow best on soil which is slightly acid, pH 6 to 6.5 greater acidity may make plant food unavailable. Heavy clay soils especially are improved by lime.

Every few years check the soil acidity and apply limestone to bring it up to the proper point.

Organic matter is necessary to vigorous grasses, and a heavy root growth increases the organic matter in the soil. So keep the grass well fed. Weeds should be killed by chemicals. Blue grass and fescue are not injured by this chemical, though red top and bent grasses may be temporarily damaged. White clover is frequently killed.

Crab grass can be killed by spraying with potassium cyanate preparations when germination first begins, and again when mature plants threaten to seed. This chemical is not poisonous to animals, and should be sprayed on the lawn so the leaves are covered with a film.

Lawn clippings should not be removed, except in hot weather when they are very heavy and if left on the lawn might ferment. Water can be applied during hot sunshine without injuring the grass, and if fungus disease is prevalent, this is the best time. It takes more water, but reduces fungi.

Growers Warned Not to Purchase 'Foreign' Tobacco

Blacksburg, Va., (AP).—A plant disease specialist warns Virginia burley tobacco growers not to buy plants outside the State.

Purchase of out-of-State plants involves a definite risk of importing black shank disease, according to S. B. Fenne of the agricultural extension service at Virginia Tech.

Shortage of plants in the Virginia burley area may tempt some growers to buy plants from Tennessee or Kentucky, Fenne said.

He advised against taking the risk, saying black shank is present in the area around Greenville, Tenn., and in 11 Kentucky counties. Fenne said the shortage of burley plants in Virginia may be relieved somewhat after the main acreage is set.

He described black shank as one of the worst tobacco diseases and said it is almost impossible to get rid of once it is established on a farm.

Giant Morning Glories Ideal Cover

GIANT-FLOWERED morning glories need only a foot-wide row and they will grow as tall as the support, even if it is 15 feet high.

They will cover a trellis, a garden house or a fence in a very short time. They also servie a useful purpose where hardy climbers have been planted recently. Most of the hardy climbers take several years before they give the desired effect and in the meantime morning glories will provide an excellent filler.

Screening undesirable views is another job they accomplish well while shrubs planted for this purpose grow large enough to take over. A few stout posts set deeply into the ground with a strong wire running from top to top make a good support.

Do not run the wire higher than necessary, because morning glories produce the greatest number of flowers on the horizontal top growth. That is the reason they are so attractive on fences.

Bright Blue Popular

THE early flowering strain of the variety Heavenly Blue, is the prettiest. Its bright blue flowers shading to white in the throat with a yellow tinge in the tube are an inspiring color.

Scarlett O'Hara, an all-America gold medal winner of some years ago, is an appealing wine red with the flowers averaging 3½ inches across. Pearly Gates, a more recent All-America silver medal variety, is a delightful pearly white. These three make an effective red, white and blue combination.

Last year another one, Blue Star, joined the group as an All-America Honorable Mention award. The light sky-blue flowers have five ray-like spears of deeper blue radiating from a yellow center. Its flowers are as large as Heavenly Blue and it blooms even earlier.

The giant-flowered morning glories are closely related to the old-fashioned sorts but are nevertheless distinct. They have larger seeds and are tender annuals. In our climate seeds which have fallen to the ground perish during the winter. That means there is no chance of them overunning the garden.

Indoor Seeding Gamble

STARTING the seeds indoors is a real gamble. There isn't anything to be gained from it anyhow. Early sowing outdoors after danger of frost is past is not always successful either. If the soil is wet and cold, the chances are that the seed will rot. The best time for sowing is early June.

There is no need for filing, chipping or nicking the seeds or resorting to other tricks to make them come up in a hurry.

Good drainage is important and for that reason a sandy soil is preferred. Where the soil is heavy, add sand or sifted coal ashes to lighten it.

Guide the young shoots to the strings and if planted to poles tie loosely with string until they begin to take hold of the support.

Avoid Solid Wall

THE worst place for them is close to a wall or solid fence. Here they make a spindly growth no matter what is done to them and the flower display is discouraging. This is caused by lack of air circulation.

Although they like hot growing weather, the flowers are most abundant and beautiful when cool autumn nights arrive. They never are more glorious than after a foggy or misty night with the blooms covered with pearly dew.

You can cut them for the house, too, and if it is done early in the morning, they will last through the day if kept out of the sun. The next day you may expect some new flowers from the buds but when they open the color will be lighter in the case of the colored varieties. Those opening on the third day will be even less colorful.

Watermelons Need Room, Plenty to Eat in Growing

WATERMELONS are among the most nutritious fruits, high in calories, and rich in minerals and vitamins.

Though they seem to be chiefly delicious juice, actually they have a lower water content than asparagus, celery, cucumbers and lettuce; and of all the vine crops, stand drought the best.

Watermelons are usually grown in hills, which may be as close together as 3 feet each way, in small gardens. Such close spacing is likely to reduce the size of the fruits, and more room should be given where possible.

Seeds should be sown in warm soil, and if the nights continue cold it may be desirable to protect the young plants at first with waxed paper tents.

Heavy fertilizer pays well with this crop. As much as a pint of balanced plant food may be mixed well with the soil beneath each hill several days before the seed is planted. Or use a shovel of well rotted manure, and half a pint of plant food. Sow ten seeds to the hill and thin out to the two strongest plants that develop.

Do not harvest watermelons until they are ripe, as they improve in flavor very little after they are picked. It takes some study to determine when a melon is ripe, without "plugging" it. Thumping is one test, ripe melons giving a dead flat sound, green ones a ringing sound.

The color of the spot where the melon lay on the ground usually changes from green to white to yellow as it ripens.

The same insects and diseases that attack muskmelons and cucumbers may attack the watermelon. If your garden has grown watermelons at any time during the last five years, a wilt resistant variety should be used.

Dogwood Leaf Blight

LEAVES of dogwood that bloomed profusely this spring are now disfigured by big brown blotches. Clinging to these blotches are the withered bracts or "petals" of the dogwood flower.

The petals fell on the leaves during a rainy or moist period and stuck there, causing minute fungus known as Botrytis to build up. Botrytis blights are common on peonies and other garden plants. On dogwood, the blight is more unsightly than damaging.

Finishing New Floors

Varnish, shellac or a penetrating floor sealer are generally used as a finish for new floors or staircases. Stain is frequently employed on when a dark tone is desired on floors. Where wood is open-grained, a paste filler the same color as the stain is needed. Excess filler must be wiped off. When practicable, a final coating of wax is advantageous.

ELECTRICAL TIPS FOR THE HOME

If You Expect to Spend Most of the Summer at Home . . .

DON'T think you have to swelter indoors simply because there are no facilities on the porch or terrace for ironing, cooking, eating, sewing, night-time recreation and entertaining.

DO transform the porch or lawn into an outdoor living area by installing handy outlets and circuits for convenient use of iron, roaster, table appliances, lamps, radio, sewing machine, etc.

Only Partially in Jest

D. C. Is One of Coolest Towns on Map, Expert Says

BELIEVE it or not—and you will —the advent of summer heat is awaited with pleasure by some people hereabouts.

There's F. M. Thuney, for instance. Thuney is Washington branch manager of the Minneapolis - Honeywell Regulator Co. which makes—you guessed it—air conditioning units.

THUNEY

Summer, you see, gives him the opportunity to take a look at how air conditioning is progressing in Greater Washington. It gives him the chance to conduct a survey, in short. He has just concluded such a study, and reports:

"Metropolitan Washington will easily retain its title this year as the Nation's most highly air-conditioned city."

Thuney's survey indicates that apartment house builders are leading the move to cool the Capital's simmering summers by constructing one-and-one-half units with air conditioning to every one that is without it.

Based on horsepower now on the power lines, commercial air conditioning installations have increased 250 percent this year, compared with a similar period in 1949, the survey showed. Government installations of air conditioning units have increased 350 percent in the same time, it was announced.

On the home front, a spot check of air conditioning retailers showed that house installations they have made are up 25 percent over last year, Thuney said.

Getting back to those horsepower figures, commercial installations last year used 975 air conditioning horsepower, Thuney said. Scheduled this year, he announced, is a total of 2417 horsepower. Federal installations have moved up from last year's total of 30 horsepower to 107 horsepower this year.

The increases brought this observation from Thuney:

"The trend toward increased air conditioning may be expected to continue. Though one of the hottest cities on the map, Washington still remains one of the coolest."

Bureau Says

Annual Check On Heating System Pays

YOUR heating system represents a substantial investment in money and is one of the most important sources of comfort and health for your family. As such, it deserves good care, says the Plumbing and Heating Industries Bureau.

If you have an automatic oil or gas burner, a yearly inspection is important. The burner should be adjusted, oiled, cleaned and any necessary repairs or replacements made. This is a job for the dealer's service man.

The same advice applies to the stoker. This unit, too, should have the attention of an expert service man at the close of the heating season.

If yours is a coal-fired boiler, the firebox should be emptied. Every vestige of ash, clinkers, and unburned fuel should be removed. This will protect the grates and firebox against the damaging effects of corrosion caused by the combination of summer moisture and sulphuric acid in the ashes and clinkers. The drafts should be open and the fuel and ash pit doors kept closed during the summer.

This Week in Real Estate

TWO WASHINGTONIANS are among the judges of the builder's competition sponsored by Parent's Magazine. They are Clarke Daniel, president of the National Association of Home Builders, and William H. Scheick, executive director of the building research advisory board of the National Research Council.

The competition is aimed at spotlighting the "best homes for family living" turned out by builders over the country. There are two classes: $16,000 to $25,000 houses, and houses under $16,000.

HOWARD R. SCHAFER, a real estate broker in Bethesda for the past eight years, has moved his offices. Formerly located at 7425 Wisconsin ave., he has just moved into his own building a few blocks away at 8005 Wisconsin ave.

A NEW REAL ESTATE FIRM—the J. F. Begg Company—went into operation last Monday at 1606 20th st. nw. Head of the company is Mrs. J. F. Begg, who has been associated with the realty firm of Mrs. Emery Smith at 1909 Q st. nw. for the past 2½ years.

The Begg company will specialize in District sales and rentals. Salesmen are Mr. and Mrs. William Sprague. Sprague also will handle Virginia real estate, and Mrs. Begg will work with Maryland properties.

WHEN THE 1950 Census data on city growth is added up, it can be expected to show a more marked movement from large central city boundaries to outlying suburban areas than had been expected, according to the National Association of Real Estate Board's newsletter.

The steady movement to the suburbs that has been going on for two decades has been stepped up to a "swollen flood" during the postwar years, the newsletters says.

SEVERAL WASHINGTONIANS have been named to the advisory committee of the housing finance branch, housing research division, Housing and Home Finance Agency. They are:

Lawrence M. Bloomberg, Edison H. Cramer, Shirley K. Hart, William H. Husband, Thomas B. King and Ralph A. Young—all Federal employes concerned with housing or related fields, and Herbert Colton, National Association of Home Builders; Oscar R. Kreutz, National Savings and Loan League, and S. E. Neel, Mortgage Bankers Association of America.

TWO APPRAISAL COURSES will be offered at Harvard University this month. Appraisal 1 will run from July 17 to 29, and Appraisal 2 from July 31 to August 12.

Details may be obtained from the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers, 22 West Monroe st., Chicago.

THE NATIONAL RETAIL Lumber Dealer's Association has urged the country's 26,000 building supply dealers to participate actively in National Home Week, which will be held from September 10 to 17.

H. R. Northrup, executive vice president of NRLDA, suggests that dealers hold open house during the week.

THE HOUSING LETTER, released every two weeks by the Housing Institute of New York, says the housing boom's outlook "has not been that of a crash in the small home field."

But, the letter adds, "there is a growing feeling that the market for homes over $10,000 has been close to saturated, and that below that price range, there is weakness developing."

ANNUAL OUTING of the Washington Real Estate Brokers Association will be held July 15 at the Shirley K Hotel, Colton, Md.

Bathing, boating, fishing, games and other features are on the agenda, reports Arnett G. Lindsay, secretary of the group.

HAROLD R. SLEEPER, vice president of the New York Building Congress, will address the Washington Building Congress luncheon Monday at 12:30 p. m. at the Mayflower Hotel. Sleeper, who is president of the Architectural League of New York, will discuss "Trends in Private Building Practices."

10 Silver Spring Homes Planned

Space Saving Saves Money

The 2-inch solid partition system of plaster and metal lath for non-bearing wall construction saves space and cuts costs in apartments, hotels, schools, hospitals, housing developments and office buildings, according to the Metal Lath Manufacturers Association, Cleveland, Ohio.

Caution Urged By VA Head in Home Buying

IN THE face of today's record housing boom and era of easy mortgage financing, Veterans' Administrator Carl R. Gray jr. has issued a word of caution to the 13 million World War II veterans who still are eligible for VA-guaranteed home loans under the GI bill.

A four-page pamphlet, which includes a letter signed by Administrator Gray and addressed to the home-buying veteran, has just come off the presses and is being distributed.

Intended as a guide for veterans who contemplate buying or building a home, the pamphlet points out some of the pitfalls and headaches which may be encountered and gives advice toward avoiding them.

First and foremost, he emphasizes that veterans should fully understand that a GI loan, like any other loan, must be repaid.

"The VA guaranty, which protects the lender against loss, encourages him to make the loan at a very low interest rate and with only a small or no down payment," Gray's letter observes. "But if you fail to make the payments you agree to make, the VA must pay the loss to the lender, and the amount paid by VA must be repaid by you.

"Any compensation or pension to which you may be entitled could be withheld in whole or in part until such debt is satisfied."

The administrator also warned veterans against taking on an obligation too heavy to carry. In addition to the monthly payments of interest and principal, he pointed out that the veteran home owner also must meet the cost of real estate taxes, insurance, repairs, heat, light, water and other utilities.

The pamphlet contains a detailed check list of points to be considered in buying a home, including neighborhood, lot, construction and financing.

Copies of the pamphlet (No. 4-5) may be obtained, singly or in quantity, at the VA regional office, 1825 H st. nw.

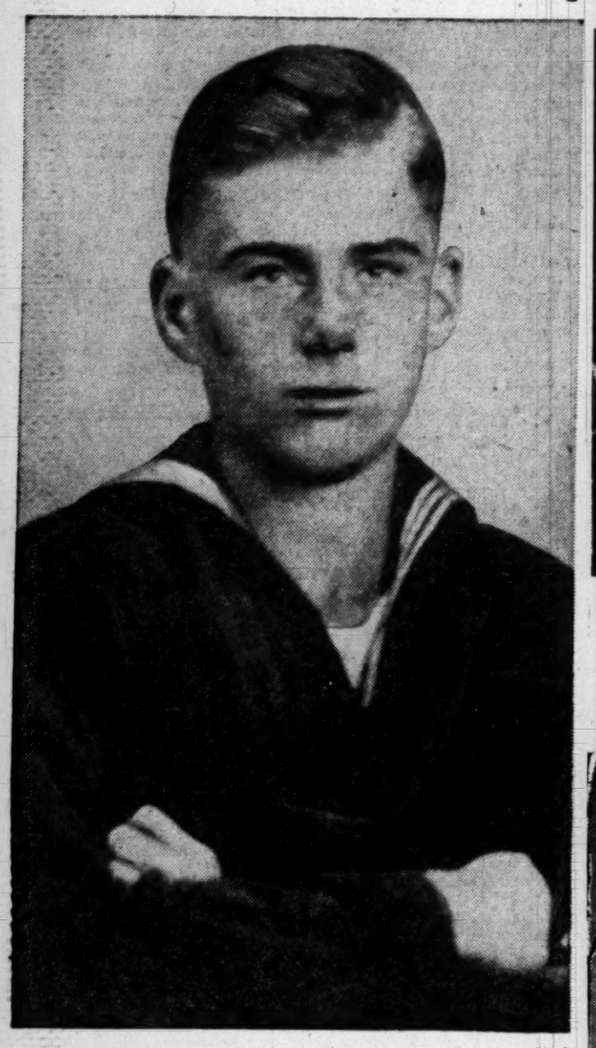
Great Godfrey!—What Makes Him Tick



SALTY . . . Arthur Godfrey in 1921, in a snapshot on the boardwalk at Virginia Beach, just before a Navy cruise to Turkey

NO. 1 FAN . . . Godfrey, in the role of band-leader, is introduced by Walter Winchell (at mike), an early Godfrey fan who gave Arthur his first major publicity back when he needed it

MINSTREL BOY . . . A younger Godfrey, in 1930, as he strummed the banjo and sang at station WFBR

MAESTRO OF TV . . . Just a homespun character everybody knows

COZY CONVERSATION . . . Shirt-sleeved, friendly and uninhibited, that was Godfrey on the radio in 1940 over WJSV.

And that's Godfrey today, on radio or television. He talks on the microphone as if he were talking to one person

What makes Godfrey go? What makes Arthur tick? Why do millions cherish his every word, kindle at the sight of his ordinary-guy face? This is the first of a series of 12 articles, taking you inside the Great Godfrey, explaining the reason for the fabulous popularity of fabulous Arthur.

By Jack O'Brian

ARTHUR GODFREY'S voice is heard by more persons each week than anyone in the history of the spoken word. He is the most valuable single property of the Columbia Broadcasting System including, it has been said, its president or its board of directors.

He earns for his network a total of more than 10 million dollars a year on nine commercially sponsored radio and television programs a week.

He manages to keep for himself—before taxes take their bite—about one million dollars a year.

After taxes, what remains is considerably less, but still an impressive sum: $140,000.

The impact of Godfrey's most casually spoken suggestion impresses everyone and most of all Godfrey himself, essentially a modest man, who never can quite believe it.

Several months ago a magazine called Guideposts, a nondenominational publication devoted to inspirational religious texts, ran an article by Arthur Godfrey about the maner in which he learned of his father's death.

Godfrey wrote that he was a Navy radioman on a destroyer at sea in the early twenties when, sleeping at night in his bunk, he dreamed his father walked into the cabin, shook his head and said: "So long, son."

Some time later Godfrey was notified by radio that his father had died, and the time was set as exactly the moment when the dream took place. It moved Godfrey deeply and his seriousness reflected itself in the article.

When it appeared, a man named S. O. Shapiro who takes an interest in its activities without recompense called Godfrey to tell him extra copies had been printed in case any of his listeners might want one without charge. Did Godfrey think 25,000 extra would be enough? By all means, Godfrey said, adding he thought perhaps a couple of thousand might do, and asked Shapiro to write him a note including the details so that he could mention it on the air.

Several days later Godfrey read the letter—just once—and mentioned that "S. O. Shapiro" was the writer of the letter, and commented pleasantly about Shapiro's initials. He said that no person who took such an unpaid interest in religious matters ever should have to use the initials SOS in a call for help.

Shapiro Gets Mail

GUIDEPOSTS quickly learned the impact of the Godfrey word. Mail literally inundated the little offices of the publication. It swamped the facilities of the little postoffice nearby with more than 45,000 requests in the first four days. They kept right on coming in a stream from every part of the United States and Canada until, when the last dribble arrived, more than 68,000 requests were counted.

Shapiro, now more amazed than Godfrey, felt the impact personally. With no more than his name and initials to guide them, more than 100 persons who hadn't contacted him in more than 25

O'Brian Spent Weeks Sifting Godfreyania

TO gather the almost dismaying amount of information that exists about Arthur Godfrey, Jack O'Brian, radio and television columnist of the New York Journal-American, spent one week simply discarding information.

He spent an entire month interviewing Godfrey, his friends, associates, sponsors and employes. The trail led from rural Virginia to the Cub Room of the Stork Club, and to Godfrey's skyscraping offices on New York's Madison ave.

O'Brian, 35, comes from Buffalo, where he quit school at 13 and worked as a messenger, day laborer, stevedore, grave-digger, prizefighter and professional football player before he got a job on the late Buffalo Times in the early '30s. In World War II, O'Brian uncovered the largest shortage of red ration points in OPA history, and several restaurants folded as a result.

He went to the New York Herald-Tribune, shifted to the Associated Press as a crime feature writer, then as a dramatic critic and finally as a Broadway columnist. Next came a six-month stint as vice president of an independent Hollywood producing firm, and back to Manhattan, at the insistence of his wife, who wearied of his nostalgia for the Big Stem. He latched onto the Journal-American and his current chore.

His wife, incidentally, is a former Powers model—Yvonne Johnston, daughter of the late prizefight promoter, Jimmie Johnston, and O'Brian will be placing ads for baby-sitters come November.

THIS LORELEI KILBOURNE babe keeps getting all the good assignments. If I were sure my dues were paid to date, I'd complain to the Newspaper Guild. Week after week on "Big Town," (WRC, 10 p. m., Tuesdays) this pride and joy of the Illustrated Press joins her two-fisted managing editor, Steve Wilson, in cleaning up gambling, kidnaping, smuggling, wild driving, and murder. Not very effectively, to be sure, since the crime waves have been flourishing in "Big Town" each week since 1937.

What an exciting life this kid leads! While I attend pink teas and conventions of the League for the Prevention of People, she's out having her lily white throat pinked with a drawn dagger or inhaling gas escaping from a pipe, broken when she attempted to free her handcuffed mitts.

While Lorelei is threatened by snarling gangsters, I get nothing exciting but a couple of letters from Milton Berle fans, written more in sorrow than in anger.

Let's see what this Lorelei does that's so exciting that "Big Town," one of radio's low-budget shows, usually outdraws its competitors and yields the sponsor more listeners per advertising dollar than any other show on the air.

Last week she pretended to be a nightclub photographer who had the murderers' faces preserved on celluloid. This little blackmail job she pretended to be pulling earned her the violent disrespect of the two murderers, but she was rescued in the nick of time.

Listens to Wilson

MOST TIMES, she has to listen to Wilson sound off and then make appreciative noises when he's finished. Sometimes it's pretty bad.

And sometimes she's given the opportunity to listen to stirring prose from visitors like: "My son's all I've got. Ever since his father died, he's all I've got. I've had a hard life . . . worked long hours, on my hands and knees, scrubbing floors. I never knew what a little rest was, a new dress, a vacation. . . . I dreamed that some day I wouldn't have to work any more that Danny would grow to be a fine big man and . . ."

And then Lorelei has to put up with Harry the Hack, a cab driver whose Big Townese goes like this: "Duke Bailey would sell out his grandmother for filthy lucre. He would double-cross a blind man outa a tin cup for a fast buck. Maybe we could offer him a stipend to sing a song."

On second thought, maybe I've got the better job.

I suspect Fran Carlon (who plays Lorelei) is numb by now. She and Edwin Pawley who plays Steve Wilson, have been catching the killers between the bulldog and three star editions for seven years. (Edward G. Robinson and Claire Trevor were the original pair.)

They Avoid Extras

THEY defend the authenticity of the show to this extent: "We never yell 'stop the press' or rip up the front page, and we never put out an extra."

Pawley doesn't explain how Wilson can leave the managing editor's office so often and still get the paper out. Pawley is

STAGE DOOR: The Sahara temperatures wilted the Broadway theater business. Only "South Pacific" attracted capacity trade . . . Todd's nudist colony at the Winter Garden, however, grossed $36,100 in its first five performances, despite the insults. Twice as much money as the "Tickets Please" box office banked, and that show was hugged by all the critics . . . Judy Garland received a contract from Val Parnell to play at the Palladium, London. "Just fill it in yourself" said the affectionate memo . . . The royalties to date on the revival of "Peter Pan" total $31,000. The author (James Barrie) willed the rights of his classic to a British hospital . . . Show business is like this, too: Jane Cowl was a star for 40 years. But friends paid for her funeral . . . The New York license commissioner laundered the breathless dance routines of Corinne and Tito Valdez in "Peep Show," which were no different than when they appeared at Radio City Music Hall and other Broadway temples of "good taste" . . . It recalls the editorial page comment during Crusader-Reformer Comstock's day, after he raided a show which featured bare femme shoulders: "Even if Comstock rids the city of sex," sarcasm'd the editorial, "there will still be a spring breeze to quicken the pulse."

THE CINEMAGICIANS: "Pagliacci" at the little Cine-Met received high praise from the critics for its English version which they credited to Sinclair Lewis. This will come as no little surprise to him, since it was written by former War Correspondent Michael Stern . . . His latest will be titled: "Thirty-Eighth Parallel" . . . The advance news on Disney's "Beaver Valley" is that it is a charming picture . . . MGM's "Three Little Words" starring Fred Astaire, the coasters report, is a "don't miss it" . . . Cary Grant and Jose Ferrer supply the power in "Crisis" . . . "Without Honor" is a weepy routiner . . . "The White Tower" has some pretty shots of mountains but the story is a molehill . . . "State Penitentiary" and "South of Death Valley" are your dishes if you're shopping for boredom.

THE ARISTOCRATS: Helen Hayes' superformance in "For Us the Living" was what you'd expect: superb . . . Ray Malone, one of the gifted tip-top-tappers, starred on "Broadway Open House" and rap away with the honors . . . Mystery repeats itself. The teevy "Lights Out" stanza Monday eve'g was an old Inner Sanctum script . . . Jack Paar has been better than this. On the "Take It or Leave It" program he went back into the catacombs. To a limping Shriner he limped: "I don't recognize your name but your fez is familiar" . . . Oh, Mr. P. . . . Jilla Webb is the name of a thrush who is expert at torchants. Makes every word in a ballad purr . . . Those syrupy-voiced homespun philosophers on the air give you the impression that there is nothing wrong with the world a proverb won't fix . . . Jan Miner on CBS' "Crime Photographer" is easy on the ear . . . Peter Lind Hayes and Mary Healy make "Stork Club," the latest TV episode, a welcome item . . . Despite the tall fees to sponsors (and almost every inch of time is sold on all the video networks) total loss for teevy stations this year is expected to hit 20 million dollars.

THE PRESS-BOX: Colonel McCormick's Chicago Tribune doesn't like the idea of sending United States troops to Korea . . . Does he want to wager they didn't like his going to Spain to visit Franco recently? . . .

Random Bits About People

By Richard L. Coe

KEEPING UP WITH PEOPLE: Tallulah Bankhead on the phone: "That blackmail publicity scared the pantaloons off that employee of mine, but the case is still coming to trial. Due process of law takes a long while, baby, but I'm not letting up on her because until the case finally does reach court her name can't be mentioned, my lawyers tell me, and that casts a shadow on everyone else who's ever worked for me. So don't let anybody think I'm giving up; it's just that these legal things take time.

"And, baby, you tell President Truman for me to give a hand to Louis Armstrong while he's in Washington (the Blue Mirror for the next two weeks.) If he couldn't see me while I was there, he can do better still and catch Louis. The Armstrong's hot right now, going to Europe and I've written a piece about him in 'Down Beat.' Comes out in a week or so. Tell everyone to buy a copy, but I'm not on a percentage for that!

"Jack Wilson has a French play I may do instead of 'Hedda Gabler.' It's called 'Nina.' has three big parts and two small ones. I'd have two leading men. Goody-goody!"

MURIEL HUTCHISON who went on for Jean Parker in the Olney's last-times-today "Light Up the Sky," had an article in the May Equity Magazine—about the perils of summer stock and going on at the last minute; couldn't have been more prophetic . . . Erwin Opens in 'Harvey' at Olney

STUART ERWIN, who has played a tree in "Mr. Sycamore" and this season struggled with visible and invisible ghosts in the musical "Great to Be Alive," this week meets everyone's favorite invisible rabbit in "Harvey."

The prize-winning comedy opens a week's run Tuesday night at the Olney Theater with the popular screen star making his first stage appearance in this area.

Veteran of more than 100 films, Erwin has just completed a part in "A Mother for May," with William Holden and Colleen Gray. Erwin's played the role before, following such noted players as Frank Fay, Joe E. Brown, James Stewart, Edgar Bergen, Rudy Vallee and Bert Wheeler.

The role of the daft sister of the barfly, who also gets around to seeing the rabbit herself, goes to Dora Clement, who played the part with Fay during his long run at the National.

Also in the cast, as the nurse, is Elizabeth Ross, who began her acting career at Catholic University's speech and drama department, where she had the role which eventually took her to Broadway, the lead of "Song of Bernadette."

Donald Foster, Wanda Lyon, John C. Becher, Sallie Brophy are the Olney favorites in the cast of Mary Chase's moonstruck comedy which racked up 1775 performances before it called quits in Gotham after the fifth longest run on record.

This afternoon and tonight brings the final performances of Moss Hart's theatrical farce, "Light Up the Sky," with Vicki Cummings, Muriel Hutchison and Robert Lowery in the starring roles.

'Rain' Will Open At Cross Roads For 2-Week Run

THE AREA had enough of the real thing last week, but "Rain" will be the big draw for the Cross Roads Theater's next two weeks starting Tuesday night, rain or shine.

John Colton's celebrated adaptation of Somerset Maugham's short story, "Sadie Thompson," has become a classic since its opening in 1922. Jeanne Eagles made a career of the lead and both Gloria Swanson and Joan Crawford played Sadie on the screen. A few seasons ago, June Havoc had the lead in a stage musical version.

Ethel Casey, who has appeared locally in numberless roles, gets the part, with Cecil Willis as director. Others in the cast include John Stanley, as the puzzled missionary, Bob Huey, Jenifer Barton, William McClellan, Dick O'Neil, Dabney Waring, Patrick J. Collins, Garry Phillips, Betty Rhame, Harlow Weller and Anne Brooks.

The Cross Roaders play Tuesday through Saturday nights, taking phone reservations at EXecutive 5640. The barn box office opens at 7:45, the curtain going up an hour later.

'College Widow' C. U. Offering

FRIDAY night brings the first of two plays to be presented by the summer sessions of Catholic University's speech and drama department. The play is George Ade's comedy about college life in 1910, "The College Widow."

The Hoosier author's classic will run through Thursday, July 20, under direction of Father Gilbert V. Hartke.

Final offering of the summer will be Ostrovsky's farce, "The Diary of a Scoundrel," to be presented under Basil Langston's direction, opening Friday, July 28. Reservation information from Michigan 6000, Extension 351.

Sesqui Chorus Plans Berlioz Requiem Here

THE BERLIOZ Requiem, one of the landmarks in musical history, will be sung in Washington early in August. It will be sung twice—on two successive evenings.

Announcement came this week from the Sesquicentennial Commission, that the Sesqui Chorus, under Paul Callaway, with augmented orchestra, brass choirs, and extra tympani, will give the gigantic score on August 2 and 3, as a memorial to Pierre L'Enfant, designer of the City of Washington.

The Requiem will be given at the Watergate site, with the added instruments on the auxiliary barge in front of the large concert stage.

The chorus of over 200 will be supported by a combined instrumental group of almost the same number. David Lloyd will be tenor soloist for the occasion, and Sigmund Spaeth will comment.

Saturday nights from 9:30 to 10:30, WMAL is broadcasting a series of concerts by European orchestras. The next few weeks will present the orchestras of Turin, Italy, French National Orchestra, the BBC Symphony, Vienna Philharmonic, Amsterdam Concergebouw, and others.

The series has been arranged by ECA, and is a completely new thing in such series.

Last chance for applications in the Friday Morning Music Club-Patrick Hayes $1000 Award—deadline is July 15. All details from Kathryn Hills Rawls, 1805 37th Street N.W.

Collingwood Has 'Heaven-Can-Wait'

"HEAVEN CAN WAIT," which the screen knew as "Here Comes Mr. Jordan," comes to the stage of the open-air Collingwood Theater for the week beginning Tuesday. Mr. Jordan is the chap who takes over the destiny of a young boxer whom an over-zealous messenger of Heaven sent too quickly on the road to eternity.

Director Steffen Zacharias' cast includes Fran Benton, Eugene Marlo, Lee Bergere, Natalie Priest, Edmund Jordan, James Van Wart, Henry Williamson, Byron Rash, Edmund Montgomery, Robert Eckel, Patience Winthrop and Helen Amendola.

This informal new summer theater is run in conjunction with the Collingwood Inn, 5 miles south of Alexandria on the Mount Vernon Highway. Performances are given nightly except Mondays, with "They Knew What They Wanted" completing its engagement this evening.

Local Talent Revue Audition Dates Set

AUDITIONS for the eleventh edition of the all-local talent revue, "Going Native," will be held July 17, 18 and 19. Applications are now obtainable in the lobbies of the Capitol, Palace and Columbia theaters.

The revue will be presented at the Capitol the week of August 31.

Random Bits About Show Folk Hereabouts

Capitol are always so much more alert than the early birds?

DAVIS SNOW, the Washington public relations man who sold his first three-act drama, "The Long Days," to the Theater Guild, will see it at Lawrence Langner's Westport Theater the 31st, with Florence Reed, John Baragrey, Roberta Jonay, Katharine Bard and Hugh Reilly under the direction of Martin Manulis. . . . Sol Hurok's management has sold out the entire three-week run of the Sadler's Wells Ballet at the Met Opera House two and a half months in advance; that's a take of $267,000, unprecedented in show biz . . . Because we have only Consty Hawl, Britain's official dance company won't come here this year, sad but wise.

ELEANORA MENDELSSOHN, whose pinch-hitting for temperamental Martita Hunt when the latter was sick for "The Madwoman of Chaillot" cured the English star of further misbehavior, is playing the part on the subway circuit and it may help Eleanora, once one of Germany's greatest, to get a proper chance over here . . . Estelle Winwood has played her last Madwoman of Passy and now is boning up on "Hay Fever" for summer stock at Mount Kisco, near her home; in the fall Estelle has a juicy role written especially for her by John Van Druten in "Bell, Book and Candle," which will star Lilli Palmer.

EDMUND B. MONTGOMERY, once a foreign service officer and now owner of the Collingwood Inn, this week gets a fling in acting. He'll play with the inn's Collingwood Players in "Heaven Can Wait" . . . First question he asked was "How big is the part?"

BERNIE FERBER, the Gayety's manager, reports he is getting other things lined up besides "Lost in the Stars," now set for the week of December 18; he's also trying to get the Kurt Weill musical for a longer stay; Playwrights' Company would be wise to take him up on it. . . . The Gayety's going to take out the benches in the second balcony, move the lower floor seats up there, with softer, if not new, seats going in for the orchestra. . . . Equity said a flat "no" to the League of New York Theaters about removing the segregation ban, a device by which the National might have wiggled off the hook; rumors are still afloat about the E street house, but only rumors.

JERRY COLONNA, part of that triple-threat bill on the Capitol stage (the Three Suns and Andy and Della Russell) claims he's got the world's most valuable mustache. . . . He's got a $250,000 policy on the thing with Lloyd's of London. . . . Issued by Tyrone Power? . . . With the British Ambassador also on the Queen Mary, Ty, Jackie Cooper and the London company of "Mister Roberts" sailed yesterday. . . . Director Joshua Logan says it's almost a new play, with added scenes and a full-sized ship, not just part of one, for the stage of the Coliseum, which is where "Annie Get Your Gun" had its three-year London run. . . . The house in St. Martin's Lane seats 2,200, only 200 more than the Strand would have seated had certain Gotham bugs kept their promises.

VIVIEN LEIGH and Sir Laurence Olivier packing their Kentish trunks for an August foray this side; he'll play in the film version of Theodore Dreiser's "Sister Carrie," she, under Elia Kazan's direction, in "A Streetcar Named Desire." . . . Paula Trueman, who was wanted for Olney's "Harvey," has been subbing for Alice Pearce in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," still hitting close to $48,000 despite a Broadway nosedive.

VICKI CUMMINGS is set for an odd experience while playing "Oh, My French Wife," with Edward Everett Horton in Rhode Island this month . . . While acting there, she'll be flown to New Hampshire to rehearse in "Private Lives," a new assignement for the air age . . . Paulette Goddard appears to be dumping the "Caesar and Cleopatra" fall tour idea; someone in Europe has come through with a movie offer . . . Theater-in-the-round is catching: San Francisco and Cleveland are opening same.

That Rabbit Gets Around

IT'S "HARVEY" week for the summer theaters near the National Capital. The comedy plays Wednesday through Saturday night at the Mountain Theater, Braddock Heights, Md., on the Frederick Route 40, the same week it's billed at nearby Olney.

Director James Decker of the Mountain group, takes the leading role that Stuart Erwin will be playing at Olney. Decker started the Mountain 11 years ago after an active career in the theater that began in childhood. He got his start under H. Webster Heck, at Frederick's Opera House during its prime—when Mrs. Fiske, Guy Bates Post and Robert Mantell regularly stopped off there.

Since establishing the Mountain, Decker has limited his theater life to the summers. During the winter he's a portrait painter. But "Harvey's" got too good a lead for even a portraitist to turn down.

Others in the cast will include Eunice Wheaton, Peggy Diem, Newton Arnold, Richard Woods, Diana Newman, Chloe Pollock, John Munson, John Weaver and Elaine Lois Roberts.

First in International Series

TONIGHT brings the first international night of six planned for the current Watergate series.

Canada leads off with soprano Lois Marshall from Toronto. To be introduced by a member of the Canadian Embassy staff, Miss Marshall will sing with the National Symphony Orchestra under Alfred Wallenstein, musical director of the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

Tuesday's Latin-American night is being combined with a special Indiana night. Note the change of day from Wednesday to Tuesday—no concert Wednesday—tickets for that night to be honored Tuesday. Soloists Jorge Bolet, pianist born in Cuba, and Eugene Conley, tenor from the Met. Guest Conductor Burle Marx from Brazil, and resident leader, Mitchell.

Friday is Belgian night. Guest Conductor Fernand Quinet from Liege, directing Belgium's Franck's D Minor Symphony. Gladys Swarthout is soloist in French and American music.

Maynor Gets Sesqui Medal But Still Sings Outdoors

By Paul Hume

SEVERAL months ago Eugene Ormandy described to me the impression made on him by Dorothy Maynor's singing with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Maynor sang with them most of the music she sang here last Sunday night at the opening Watergate concert. Ormandy said, "It is amazing the way her voice comes out with no effort. It is as if there were no such thing as the physical problem of producing tone—it was just pure music, with the voice moving like another instrument among instruments. The way she sings is incredible."

Listening to Maynor last Sunday as she moved through one of the most difficult of all Mozart arias, "Come scoglio," we could see what Ormandy meant. The great leaps in the music were no hurdle to her; and in Debussy's Air de Lia, there was a spiritual beauty and detached sensation that removed it from the realm of mere tone production.

Talking with Miss Maynor earlier, it was stimulating to hear her tell about rehearsing Ravel's Scheherezade with Pierre Monteux last season when she sang it with the great French San Francisco conductor four times.

Maynor said, "During the war, Monteux and I went out to some boats which, in the early war days, could not land for fear of deserters. So we went to them to give them some music. It was Christmas, and Monteux (who is 75 and looks very jolly) put on Santa Claus clothes." With her wonderfully friendly laugh, Maynor added, "Now I have trouble remembering him as anything but Santa Claus."

She is looking forward eagerly to singing with Monteux and the NBC Symphony on July 23d, on the radio.

European Tour

SINCE Miss Maynor has just returned from a European tour, we wanted to know about that. She sang a Debussy-Dupare concert in Holland, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting—Leinsdorf who is now conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic.

Maynor also took time to visit Pablo Casals shortly before the opening of the Prades Bach Festival which the great cellist led.

"I would have loved to stay for that, but I was homesick", she added. "Casals is such a great and simple man — it is wonderful just to talk to him. And think of how much he has given us, in refusing to play, because of the way he feels about injustices in Spain today."

Tendered Medal

THINKING of these things, and recalling Maynor triumphs throughout this country — with our leading orchestras — and before the most distinguished audience in Aspen, Colo. last summer during the Goethe Festival, we were happy to see her given the Sesquicentennial Memorial Medal last Sunday night.

The medal was authorized by Congress. A copy of it will be given each of the summer soloists at the Watergate. In presenting it to Maynor, Emerson Meyers, music director of the Sesquicentennial, spoke about the statue of Freedom, stamped on one side of the silver disc.

Immediately after the presentation, the Sesquicentennial Chorus sang the Testament of Freedom, with words by Thomas Jefferson.

Then it struck us — Dorothy Maynor has never sung in a concert hall in Washington. One of the greatest artists of our land, raised and trained in this country — hailed by our foremost musicians and artists — a singer capable of holding last week's audience absolutely spellbound and silent for a full minute after she finished singing — Dorothy Maynor has done her Washington singing out of doors in our city.

San Francisco welcomes her. Philadelphia cannot hear her enough—the orchestra and concert platforms of America and Europe are open to her any time.

But not the stage of Constitution Hall in Washington, D. C., Capital of the United States, home of democracy.

Eddie (WTOP) Gallaher ON RECORDS

MEMORIES of a Pilgrim in Manhattan: Robert Q. Lewis, whom I visited on his "ABC's of Music" show, paying a return call on the Sundial in its temporary New York studios. Bob just made his recording debut on Columbia records and hopes to concentrate on singing the old songs. Imagine his surprise, therefore, when I took the one new number he recorded, "I'm in Love With the Mother of the Girl I Love," and picked it as my favorite of his initial batch . . . Dick Haymes, flying all the way from California, appearing with yours truly and Robert Q. on the Chesterfield show, then turning around immediately and flying all the way back to Hollywood again.

Dick's frequent transcontinental jaunts have cost him some weight, but he actually looks better with the decreased poundage . . . Ralph Flanagan, on the same program, conducting the string section he added to his orchestra to provide a good accompaniment for Haymes.

Ralph works hard. This is his first big network commercial, and he's determined to please the fans who have brought him so far in so short a time . . . Jo Stafford, causing much comment in New York as she leaves her long stay with Capitol Records and considers other offers. Her departure follows that of her accompanist, Paul Weston, by just a few weeks . . . Another top female singing star, throwing the office of her recording company into an uproar by having her lawyer phone to complain about the songs she has been given to record recently . . .

PERRY COMO, smiling his approval as he reads this column of a couple of weeks ago about his first big break. Perry is now completing a project close to his heart, an album of favorite hymns; and is also taking time out from his summer golf to M.C. the "Toast of the Town" show on TV tonight.

Things are pretty quiet around the house these days, says Perry; the kids are away at camp . . .

Danny Kaye, who has conquered the British more thoroughly than any American since George Washington, recalling his most recent European trip as he visits with a few friends, including this reporter, at his record headquarters.

The Decca gang let him hear a record by a lonesome-sounding cowboy, and had their hopes fulfilled when Danny went into a devastating impromptu impersonation of the poor fellow . . . Guy Lombardo, introducing Bill Flanagan in the floor show at the Waldorf-Astoria as guitar soloist in "The Third Man Theme." Since Guy's arrangement actually contains only a few bars of guitar playing, Bill spends most of the selection standing motionless in the spotlight, staring self-consciously at the audience . . .

VIC DAMONE, also at the Waldorf, reaching for a high note, and sustaining it at the finish of "You're Breaking My Heart," while those of us in the audience, including Milton Berle, listen attentively. "My wife went to the powder room when he started on that high note," says an awestruck recording executive, "and when she came back, he was still holding it."

Vic comes over to the table to invite me out to his house the next night for some of his Mom's spaghetti, but I have to refuse because of radio rehearsals.

Vic has been busy taking lessons lately, with singing, boxing and French all in the curriculum. He is due to start his MGM picture in Hollywood this week . . . Mitch Miller, reminiscing about the strange ways of the recording world. A few years ago he was an anonymous oboe player in the orchestra accompanying Frank Sinatra. Today, he is Frank's boss as chief popular music executive at Columbia Records, and is headed for the best-seller lists in his own name for his record of "Tzena, Tzena, Tzena."

Eddie Gallaher is heard on WTOP every day except Sunday on the Sundial, 7:45 to 9:00 a. m.; Moondial, 11:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m.

The Record Player

Dello Joio's Harp Concerto Is Delightful

DELLO JOIO: Concerto for harp and orchestra; also: Diamond: Music for Romeo and Juliet. Edward Vito, harpist, with Little Orchestra Society under Thomas K. Scherman. Columbia ML 4303. $4.95.

This is a wonderful record in several ways. It is expert engineering, music by two of the best American composers, music never recorded before, and very good music well played.

Dello Joio is smart to add to the small body of harp music. He stands to get many more performances for this piece than he could have hoped to get with a violin concerto, or a suite for orchestra, of which there are so many more in competition.

In two movements, the work starts with a sonorous passacaglia that builds to a fine closing, having explored both harp and structural possibilities along the way. The second movement is a scherzo of bright interest, again giving the harp chances for new kinds of playing—new in rhythms rather than sonorities. The orchestral background is well played by the chamber orchestra under young Scherman.

DAVID DIAMOND'S music, played by Richard Bales in his recent American festival at the National Gallery, is a good suite to have on records. This, its first disc appearance, does handsomely. The music, as we said in May, has appeal in texture and melodic line. The family feud is short and comes at the start. Scenes between Juliet and her nurse, and the final death scene grow on further hearings. The playing is again excellent.

Reproductions Of Old Masters Can Be Rented

Art Notes

ALTHOUGH adjacent to Manhattan, center of the United States art world, Brooklyn has excellent art facilities of its own. Its museum is one of the best in the country. Brooklyn was a pioneer in the children's art center movement, and now the Public Library has come forward with a scheme for lending reproductions of old and modern masters for the home.

Beginning July 17 lenders may secure works from the Library's extensive collection for $.25 a month, for periods up to three months. Reproductions have been treated to make them more durable and are framed to make them more decorative. Special exhibits of material available will be shown during the summer.

The Boston Museum of Fine Arts has acquired an early painting, one of the few known remaining examples of the Bohemian School, subject, "Death of the Virgin" believed by Dr. Hanns Swarzenski of the staff to have been executed around 1350. It was discovered about 50 years ago in the chapel of a castle in Bohemia and until recently was on loan to the National Collection in Prague.

The French painter, Henri Matisse, won first prize in the Venice International art exhibition. First in sculpture went to Ossip Zadkine. Prizes were cash, in lire amounting to about $1,600 in U. S. money.

Scheduled next for exhibit at the National Gallery of Art in Washington is the loan collection sent from abroad by C. S. Gulbenkian. Examples by Dirk Bouts, Ghirlandajo, Rubens, Van Dyck, Rembrandt, Franz Hals, La Tour, Fragonard, Gainsborough, Corot, Manet, Monet, Degas, and Renoir.

In St Louis the City Art Museum is showing ballet designs and costume sketches from the Serge Lifar collection, originally formed by Diaghilev, impresario of the Russian ballet. Artists who contributed designs include di Chirico, Derain, Max Ernst, and Tchelitchev.

Through the summer the Art Institute of Chicago is showing the collection recently acquired by the bequest of Kate L. Brewster, largely examples of French nineteenth-century painting and some notable European sculpture.

A committee has been formed by "The American Friends of Israel Museums", the main function of which is to secure works of art for museums in the new country. A number of gifts have already been pledged.—J. W. C.

2 Sesqui Exhibits Feature Morse

"The Old House of Representatives," by Samuel F. B. Morse, 1822

By Jane Watson Crane

THE Capital, always a happy hunting ground for the student of American history, is more richly endowed with source material this summer than ever before.

The Sesquicentennial portrait at the National Gallery shows the faces of American leaders in Washington, from bandmasters to presidents.

"American Processional," the Corcoran show, illustrates events and their background from the Discovery of America to 1900. To carry out this ambitious scheme no effort or expense was spared to secure what remain of the records made by artists at the time the events were taking place. The search took members of the Corcoran staff to Europe and across the United States.

The result is an assemblage impressive in its authenticity, which plays up the role of the American artist as recorder (although not as interpreter). Stressing the contemporaneous, the exhibit mainly by-passes the type of blown-up, over-dramatized "historic" canvases which romanticize the past, and the more conscientious, though frequently dry-as-dust, compositions of the artist-archeologists.

Works on Loan

THE National Gallery show will continue to November 19, the Corcoran to December 17. In both cases, a great many people and institutions contributed works on loan. Their value in dollars has been duly recorded, but in fact they are national heirlooms as incalculable as are family treasures.

What price can be put on a British artist's conception of the Revolutionary War, or John Trumbull's record from memory of the Battle of Bunker Hill?

From Jefferson and perhaps even before him, one can single out public figures who made contributions in the arts in addition to their more worldly achievements. Besides these, the National Gallery has set aside one room in which are shown portraits of artists, architects and planners who contributed specifically to the development of the National Capital. There is, however, one man who occupies a unique position.

Morse Featured

SAMUEL F. B. MORSE trained for a career as an artist. While he painted portraits by the head to earn a meager living, he dreamed of bigger projects to challenge his skill and imagination. As painter or sculptor, he never won success in his lifetime. In science, as one of the originators of telegraphic communication, he won fame and a material fortune.

Morse is featured in both Sesquicentennial shows; on three counts he earns admission—as inventor, artist-reporter, and creative artist. His sensitive early self-portrait and a head of Lafayette, executed at a time of great personal stress, are shown at the National Gallery. The Corcoran features his big canvas, "The Old House of Representatives," a painting which was a "flop" in its time.

In 1822, when Morse was sadly in need of funds, he went to Washington to see President Monroe. His aim was to paint the House and Senate and later the executive officials in the White House. A room was set aside for him next to the House chamber, where members could drop in and out to sit for their portraits and still be near enough to hear their call.

Bought in 1911

MORSE did over 80 heads that first winter, gaining a little additional income by painting small portraits for $20 apiece. When the canvas was finally completed, he hired rooms in Boston to show it for an admission fee ($.25). Attendance was good the first few days but it soon dropped, and a subsequent showing in New York brought even less in receipts.

For a number of years the painting was lost to sight altogether, until it was discovered by Daniel Huntington, one-time pupil of Morse, who bought and renovated it. His aim was to persuade Congress to buy it for the Nation, but when this scheme fell through the Corcoran bought the painting in 1911.

considered the only authentic portion of the show—he once worked for the Associated Press, reading radio dispatches for a rural closed circuit telephone line before he went on to Broadway, where he is perhaps best known for his lead in Elmer Gantry.

But even if the series makes the working press scoff, "Big Town" did win two major safety awards last year, the National Safety Council Public Interest Award and the Alfred P. Sloan Traffic Safety Award.

The show finished up the 1948-49 season with 13 million listeners. The railroad that connects the Pawley farm and New York City voluntarily holds the train for Actor Pawley if he's late. And a group of youngsters who had escaped from reform school in West Nyack turned themselves in to Pawley one night. They knew he was Steve Wilson and they thought it was the best thing to do.

Old two-fisted Wilson didn't quite know what to do with the embryo gangsters. Just fed them cookies and milk, until one of the youngsters suggested that Wilson ought to call the reform school. He did.

WRC Starts Ezra In Drama Series

A new series of dramas dealing with the potential of human resources available to democracy when good human relations are fostered, begins today at 11:15 a. m. on WRC.

The first in the 13-week series will star Ezra Stone as a boy whose education is blocked by discrimination in colleges. Succeeding programs will feature Tyrone Power, Richard Widmark, Martha Scott, Walter Hampden, Edward R. Murrow and other stars.

The series, "The New Frontier," is a project of the Institute for Democratic Education. Previous radio work by the institute have earned it Variety's "Showmanagement Plaque," two awards at the Ohio State University's annual Institute for Education by Radio, and a citation from the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Great Godfrey!

years wrote to ask if he were the same man they knew. Dozens of other letters came from University of Illinois classmates he hadn't seen since his graduation in 1923. One relative he never knew existed wrote him from Montana. Old girl friends, boyhood chums, took pen in hand merely because Godfrey had mentioned him in passing. He couldn't count the telephone calls. "Hundreds, at least," he said, called him within a few hours of the broadcast.

"And he only mentioned me in passing," Shapiro said, his voice still with a note of wonderment.

Nothing of Godfrey's exterior seems to indicate the impact of his slightest suggestion on his listeners. He is a medium-proportioned man, about five-eleven. He is 46 years old, looks ten years younger in person, is well dressed in a casual fashion, topped by a shock of red hair that only color television could depict properly to his 40,000,000 fans.

He's the sort of bright-faced fellow everyone feels he knows as soon as he shakes hands. I met him first years ago and had that feeling. In the years since, that feeling has been more than justified.

Has his success changed him?

Certainly, but not in any irritating way, except to himself.

Godfrey always was a fellow who liked to wander around New York, in book stores, restaurants, movies, the Automat. He particularly enjoyed the Automat where he could pick up many a sprightly conversation and turn it to his radio use.

Turn in His Career

NOW that television has made his face as familiar as his voice, he can't go anywhere without being recognized and lionized. He liked it better when he was just a voice.

His appearance on TV, of course, was an abrupt turn in his career. It brought home to viewers the fact that Godfrey was just as homespun a character as his rich, warm radio conversation suggested. It brought his career into fullest flower, after a long climb which he considers is based on "getting the right breaks at the right time."

When and what were these "breaks"?

The moment he decided to start talking over a radio microphone as if he were talking to one person instead of declaiming to some unseen convention of listeners; the day he started kicking the stuffiness out of radio commercials; and the day Walter Winchell gave him his first "plug."

The first, while it came without the dramatic significance of Winchell's admiration, came in the wake of a near-tragic auto accident which left Godfrey with 47 fractures, including a badly injured leg which to this day causes him to limp slightly.

Recuperating painfully, Godfrey had a radio brought in. An unusual hospital item in 1931, it helped keep him entertained, but more important, helped him do extensive personal research on which bigtime radio announcers tick.

At the time, Godfrey affected a bit of a British accent and a broad A. "It must have been murder" he said the other day, grimacing as if the memory hurt.

But lying in that Washington hospital, his body in a cast and one leg poised painfully at the end of a rope, Godfrey came to realize that the radio techniques being used were all wrong.

There he was, one man in a hospital room, all by himself, and the announcers were talking to him as if he were the last man in the last row of 75,000 persons in Yankee Stadium. For six months he took this lesson. He never learned one to better advantage.

Once back on the job, he put his theory into practice. His British accent disappeared. No more broad A. Just a casual tone, intimately delivered.

His superiors were suspicious at first, preferring the unctuous formality to which they were accustomed.

Kidding the Sponsors

NOT long thereafter he fell upon what has come to be his most precious trademark, his ability to kid the labels off his commercial announcements.

It was 1933 and a Washington department store sent along a bit of radio copy to be read "straight."

Handed to Godfrey just before he went on the air, it detailed, unblushingly, "filmly, clingy, alluring silk underwear in devastating pink and black!"

Godfrey's voice rose, awed and incredulous, as he read. Then he let that final colorful syllable sink in during a moment of silent appreciation and then—a long, low unmistakably Godfrey-style whistle and the hoarse, whispered comment:

"Is MY face red!"

His bosses were livid as they rushed in—too late to stop him.

They merely postponed the moment when they could toss him bodily from the premises until after they learned how mad the department store management would be. But no complaint arrived.

The store, it seemed, sold out its stock of "filmy, clingy" commodities within an hour. Thenceforth Arthur was left strictly to his own salesmanship devices.

His Beginning There

THAT, it safely can be said, was the beginning.

Many persons, including the redhead himself, realizing the fabulous success attending anything he touches, try to put a finger directly on the reason. Some even have tried asking Godfrey. They get the same, sincerely modest answer:

"Don't ask me!"

But advertising men, network brass and his many friends agree it probably is what Morton Downey, one of Godfrey's close friends, told me last week in attempting to sum him up:

"Arthur's just a nice guy," Morton explained, "whose nice-guy qualities and nice-guy reactions in almost any situation that pops up spill out in warm, articulate fashion.

"The world's loaded with nice guys, but few of them have Arthur's ability to get off his chest the little problems that bother him, and which, it turns out are everyone else's problems, nor his genius in observing the little unusual things in simple terms the rest of us grope for.

"The fans see in Arthur a guy they respect for all those nice-guy reactions. That's why they rush out and buy his orange juice and tea bags when he tells them to. They're just sort of grateful."

TOMORROW: Godfrey's first pay was $10 per week.

Sesqui Play Ticket Sale Plans Made

WITH the cast selected and in rehearsal for an August 5 opening, ticket arrangements also are well in hand for Paul Green's "Faith of Our Fathers."

The dramatist's symphonic play for the National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission is being widely publicized across the land, according to Paul M. Massmann, general manager of the commission.

Tickets for all performances through September 30 are on sale at four spots downtown: Campbell's music shop, 1108 G st.; Brentano's book store, 1322 F st., and at the two Super Music City stores, 1350 F st. and 1110 7th st.

Tuesday the amphitheater ticket office, in Rock Creek Park near 16th st. and Colorado ave., will open for the season, and be open from 10 a. m. till 6 daily.

Special discount sales for civic, industrial and patriotic organizations may be arranged, with a 10 percent discount for tickets in excess of 100 for any one performance and a 15 percent discount for any group buying out all 4056 seats of the new amphitheater.

"Since veterans' organizations were among the first to take cognizance of this event," Manager Massmann stated this week, "the first public showing of 'Faith of Our Fathers', has been designated as veterans' night, with Col. Waldron E. Leonard as chairman for the opening.

He has set up a special veterans' box office in a trailer at 14th st. and Pennsylvania ave.

Massmann also stated that ticket and travel agencies in all principal Eastern cities will be handling seat sales.

Price scale and number of seats in each price group follow: 1836 seats for 90 cents, 1350 seats for $1.80 and 870 seats for $2.40. There will be performances nightly except Mondays.

Major Changes Due

TV Talent Raids Hit Film Field

By Rader Winget

NEW YORK.—The whirlwind talent raids that television is making on radio have extended into the Broadway and Hollywood show business.

Before the summer is over, a major change affecting all four entertainment fields can be expected.

The screams you hear are from stars, producers, theater owners, play backers and everybody who stands to make or lose money in the entertainment business. The big scramble is under way.

Very little sound is to be heard yet from members of the audience. You won't see the results until this fall when the shake-up takes effect. Actually, the benefits to the audience are going to be greater than those in the industry think.

MISS MERMAN

Here is what has happened:

Radio stars are leaving radio in droves, almost, and embracing television exclusively. If you don't own a television set, or aren't in an area where there is a television station, you will seldom hear in person again such stars as Fred Allen, Milton Berle, Eddie Cantor, Ed Wynn, Frank Sinatra, Paul Whiteman and many others. They will be on television.

Right away comes the question: "Is that bad?" Some listeners believe it will be a good break for the audience because new stars will take their places on radio. A cynical way of looking at it is that the same old jokes formerly heard on radio now will be seen on television. Presumably the new stars will bring new jokes.

Television, however, is going to buy some new faces and new jokes of its own. National Broadcasting Co. is going to finance the production of a new Broadway musical comedy named "Call Me Madam." Ethel Merman, star of "Annie Get Your Gun," heads the cast. Movie Star Paul Lukas will be featured. Music by Irving Berlin. The book by Lindsay & Crouse who did "Life With Father."

NBC is paying $200,000 to finance this show and another $25,000 if needed. What does the network get? A reported 35 percent of net profits plus radio and television and recording rights.

There is speculation that the deal hinged on the show getting a large chunk of publicity through NBC's facilities. Publicity would help the show both in New York and on the road, and at the same time it would serve as a build-up when NBC itself uses the talent.

And what will you get? You will see these stars perform on television and hear them sing the hit tunes over the radio and on records.

First Deal of Kind

THIS IS THE first time a deal like this ever has been made. Usually a show gets its money from a great number of backers and then sells subsidiary rights to the highest bidder. In the case of "South Pacific," Columbia records bought the hit tunes made by the original cast. But Columbia Broadcasting System didn't touch the radio and television rights.

If the NBC deal with "Call Me Madam" is a success, an increasing number of similar package deals are expected, both on Broadway for theatrical hits and in Hollywood for movies.

The publishing industry has gone through a parallel situation. Digest magazines have been known to finance original publication in order to get the reprint rights. Cheap paper-backed books are run off the press right along with the high priced de luxe edition. Books are written with more than one eye on movie possibilities.

So perhaps in the future there will be one-hour television and radio shows with Broadway and Hollywood stars at the same time the longer originals are running on stage and screen.

How to Enjoy European Trip

Customs Differ, So Go Prepared

By Kathryn E. Bowers

IF YOU are going to Europe—Don't expect a cold glass of water whenever you think you need it—don't even expect a glass of water! European waiters cannot, and in some instances will not, accustom themselves to providing water at meals. They listen to your request, agree to it, and then do nothing about it. If you mention it again, they may bring one glass to you and ignore the others at the table.

If you have been cautious enough to take typhoid shots before going abroad, you don't have to be too concerned about drinking only bottled water.

Evian is popular in France and pellegrino in Italy, but be sure the bottle is opened in your presence. If it doesn't have a cap on it it could have been filled, a moment before, at the tap! I can recall one waiter, when asked for water, who quickly informed us that it was too risky to drink tap water, did we want a bottle of water.

Another of our customs that takes a beating is tea or coffee with your meal. For breakfast, yes (carrying soluble coffee with you is a great comfort); for lunch, none at all unless you pay extra for it; and in the evening, maybe after your meal, but, more frequently, not at the table at all, but in the lounge.

Ice Very Scarce

ICE IS A very scarce commodity in Europe, seldom seen at the table. If you order a glass of beer, the waiter assures you that it is cold, but when it comes it is at room temperature.

The European telephone is an instrument that teaches you great patience and fortitude. After you tell the operator the number, you hang on and on, 5, 10 minutes, maybe she'll come back on the line, then it goes dead and again nothing happens.

Well, there are many things, besides getting used to the above customs that you can prepare for and have a smoother journey thereby. Placing the more important ones first, you should:

British Travel Association

Big Ben, famous landmark of London, provides an impressive backdrop for two of the 175,000 Americans visiting Britain this year

Take $10 travelers' cheques—larger denominations are difficult to cash in some places. By all means take a supply of one dollar bills, at least $50 per person. Many times you will find it convenient to change several dollars into foreign currency, because you are leaving a country shortly and do not want to be burdened with money that you can't use elsewhere.

A small supply, perhaps $5 worth, of the currency of each of the countries you are planning to visit, is an excellent thing to take with you from here. I had several opportunities to use some before I was able to cash a travelers' cheque.

Sturdy Luggage Needed

BE SURE your luggage is very sturdy. It's a shame to take new bags, you'll never recognize them if they hold out until you get home—but old bags must be able to stand a terrific beating and still hold their own. Two things that might help would be heavy canvas covers and a handle with two straps.

Carry a small overnight case. This should have supplies for a night's lodging, in case your big bags don't catch up with you in time.

Have a shoulder bag without a zipper closing. You will be piling it so full along the way, if the zipper breaks from so much handing, you're out of luck.

Have a small money bag on your person, with some travelers' cheques, cash, vaccination certificate, return ticket, etc. Then, if you are unfortunate enough to lose your pocketbook, or some of its contents, you always have something to fall back on.

My companions called my luggage "Noah's Ark" because it had many useful things in it that they hadn't thought of. It came in handy for them, at times, too. Such as:

Shoe polish, liquid cleanser, sleeping mask, alarm clock, flashlight, plastic bags, rubber bands, scotch tape, band aids, bathroom tissue, chocolate bars, and any medications you are apt to need.

Clothes a Problem

YOUR clothes are an individual problem, but don't take too much. Two suits and several blouses will serve all of your travel needs throughout Europe, unless it is warm. Then a couple of extra dresses would be in order.

Going to Europe is a glorious adventure. Go prepared to accept conditions as you find them—food, hotels, trains, do not measure up to standards that we are used to.

Steamship Line Opens New Office

AMERICAN EXPORT LINES' new traffic office at 1517 K st. nw., follows, in color and comfort, the theme of "Modern American Living at Sea" used by Henry Dreyfuss, industrial designers, in developing the interiors of Export's two new air-conditioned liners. They are the 1000-passenger liners, the Independence and the Constitution, which will go into Mediterranean express service in early 1951.

Hydrangea Week at Atlantic City

ATLANTIC CITY, July 8.—The resort's official flower, the hydrangea, will be blooming in all its glory within the next few days and the eleventh annual "Hydrangea Week" will be observed next week.

Years ago it was found that the hydrangea, more than any other flower, seemed to thrive in the salt air and the sandy soil of Absecon Island. Consequently the cottagers used them liberally for decoration and now most every garden in Atlantic City and its suburban communities, Ventnor, Margate, Longport and Brigantine features some of the plants.

Virginia Park Cabins Stay Open to October

RICHMOND, July 8—Vacation cabins in six of Virginia's State parks will remain open a month after Labor Day to provide inexpensive accommodations during the Old Dominion's most glorious travel season, the State Conservation Commission announces.

Renting for $48 per week for four people, a typical cabin in any one of the parks is equipped with electric or gas stove, ice box, housekeeping utensils and linens. All the parks have restaurants for fugitives from the kitchen who yet want the informality and privacy which secluded cabins afford.

Virginia's parks are scattered throughout the State and take full advantage of the varied altitudes. Douthat and Hungry Mother, in the Alleghany Mountains, cover areas of 5,000 and 2,400 acres respectively.

Randolph Odell, director of the division of parks, has announced that there are cabins in these two parks available after September 4 until closing date of October 2, and also in Fairy Stone and Staunton River. Cabins for occupancy beginning September 11 can be had in Seashore and Westmoreland Parks.

Because of the ever increasing popularity of park accommodations, $600,000 will be spent on construction of 67 additional modern cabins for the 1951 season. Seashore's cabin colony will be increased from 16 to 25, Westmoreland from 12 to 25, Douthat from 25 to 30, Hungry Mother from 13 to 25 and Fairy Stone from 9 to 25.

The newest park, Claytor Lake, in Pulaski County, which up to this year has been equipped only with facilities for day use, will have 12 new cabins ready for occupancy in 1951. At Prince Edward State Park, for Negroes, six miles south of Burkeville, a restaurant, six cabins and bath houses have been constructed.

Most popular of all the parks is Seashore, with two water frontages, one on Chesapeake Bay and the other on a collection of lakes and creeks known as Lynnhaven Inlet, Broad Bay, Linhorn Bay and Crystal Lake.

Rebuilding Job Is Pressed at Williamsburg

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., July 8. Restoration and reconstruction is continuing here at a brisk pace with work in progress on seven different projects to restore further the colonial portions of this historic city as they were two centuries ago.

Work is under way on the reconstruction of the Draper and Chiswell houses on Francis st., the Blue Bell on Capitol Square and the King's Arms Tavern on Duke of Gloucester st.

Restoration work is in progress on the Tayloe House on Nicholson st. and the Brush-Everard House on Palace Green along with minor restoration work on the Roscow Cole office, used as the public library for the city. Recently completed projects include the Pasteur-Galt Apothecary Shop and Nicholson's Shop on the Duke of Gloucester st.

Foundations have been set for the Draper House on its original site and framing is virtually completed on the detached kitchen. This colonial house, to be used as a private residence, will show the interesting combination of a shop with a dwelling.

Work is well advanced on the Blue Bell, an early eighteenth century house, also being reconstructed on its original site. The structure was used variously as a tavern, shop and dwelling in the eighteenth century.

The King's Arms Tavern and Purdie's Dwelling reconstructions, one of the largest single reconstruction projects to be undertaken in the postwar building program here, are progressing rapidly.

This lighthouse on Okracoke Island, North Carolina, was built in 1798 and is still in use

Arts Festival Ends July 22

THE White Mountains Seven Arts Festival, a new type of relaxing intellectual activity for vacationers, will continue until July 22 at Pike, New Hampshire at the Lake Tarleton Club.

Prominent men and women of the seven arts, poets and playwrights, novelists and artists, educators, theatrical producers and stars of the theater, radio and television, will be presented daily.

All the sessions will be open to the public without charge.

Speakers will include: Drama Critics Robert Garland and Robert Coleman of the New York Journal American and Daily Mirror; Broadway Producer Lee Sabinson; Actor Sam Jaffe; Author Charles Jackson, and Author Waverly Root.

Airline Offers Special Tours to California

A 10-DAY "Blue Ribbon" tour by air to California at bargain rates is now on sale at American Airlines sales offices. Costing $245 from Chicago or $325.50 from Washington, the tour utilizes DC-6 air coach service.

The itinerary includes daylight flights to and from Los Angeles in the 70 passenger DC-6 Blue Ribbon schedules, tours to movie stars' homes, visits to studios, motor trips to scenic and historic points of interest in the Los Angeles area, Santa Barbara and Catalina, and an overnight visit to San Diego.

The Santa Barbara excursion is an all-day trip by car through the rich citrus groves and over the spectacular Sulphur Mountain drive to Santa Barbara.

The tourist will have a two-day trip to San Diego, where he will see Balboa Park, Point Loma, Sunset Cliffs, Fort Stockton and Mission Hills. He will have an opportunity to cross the Mexican border into Tisjuana.

A high point of the Blue Ribbon vacation is the steamer trip to Catalina Island, where the tourist may swim, view the submarine gardens from a glass-bottomed boat and enjoy an evening of resort fun.

Two free days in Los Angeles end the vacation. On one of the final nights, an escorted tour is planned to two of the top night spots of Hollywood, the Cocoanut Grove and the Biltmore Bowl.

The price includes round-trip air transportation to Los Angeles; accommodations at the Hollywood Plaza or (at a slightly higher cost) the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel, all the sight-seeing trips and transfers between airport and hotel. Cost from cities other than New York and Chicago can be ascertained at any travel agency or American Airlines office.

I wouldn't trade noses with nobody

THE REAL THING

(Here's what happened when PARADE and some NBC photo-laboratory jokesters tried some other famous noses on Durante . . . and asked him how he liked the results.—ED.)

By JIMMY DURANTE

WHAT A PERPLEXING question to ask a man who's brought up his nose like his very own child—"how'd you like tuh wear some other guy's schnozzes?" It's positively youmiliating and degradnin. It's a nightmare and I'm boiling over like Veservious to think that some people are so jealous. Nature put in overtime to mold my snifter and it's sackreligious to double-cross the old gal. As I says so often when somebody says how is it Jimmy that your schnoz is always so bright and shiny? And I ups and answers it's because I keep it out of everybody else's business. Dat's my policy and like my nose they ain't nobody gonna alter it . . .

HOPE'S AIN'T A NOSE—IT'S A ski-jump for midgets . . .

SINATRA NEEDS my schnoz more than I need his. He needs the extra weight . . . !

WOULD GABLE want to rub noses with me if I had Hedy's dainty schnoz? . . .

I GOT no Howdy Doody nose but I don't need no strings to breathe with . . .

FIBBER McGEE'S nose looks like a radiator cap on a jaunty convertible . . .

DOROTHY SHAVER: it all began with dolls...

The Turning Point

WHEN DOROTHY SHAVER was named president of a famous department store three years ago, people gasped. Nobody believed that a woman—particularly a very feminine woman partial to lace handkerchiefs and timid about thunderstorms—could fight the battles of an enormous retail corporation.

But Miss Shaver has proven herself a dynamic executive. Her brilliant merchandising ideas have kept sales zooming up and up in her store, New York's Lord and Taylor. And she has contributed much to fostering American art and styles throughout the nation.

Dolls Began It

How did a woman launch such a fabulous career? It began with dolls!

Dorothy was born in tiny Center Point, Ark. (pop. 300). After college, she decided she wanted a career in selling. With her artistic sister, Elsie, she went to New York. And there Dorothy asked Elsie to create a doll. (She had heard that the kewpie dolls had netted a fortune.) Elsie promptly dreamed up a quintet of impish-faced dolls which they called the "Little Shavers."

While the girls were deciding how to market their toys, they had a caller. He was Samuel Reyburn, then head of Lord and Taylor. He had known the girls' parents and stopped by one Sunday morning after church to pay a family call. As he was leaving, Dorothy said: "Show Mr. Reyburn your dolls, Elsie."

Reyburn stayed to look, liked the dolls so much he ordered several to sell. That was the beginning of a toy business that kept the girls busy for four years. Finally, Dorothy went to work for Lord and Taylor as a comparison shopper. Her climb was swift—the first woman in retail history to work her way up to the presidency of a $45,000,000 corporation.

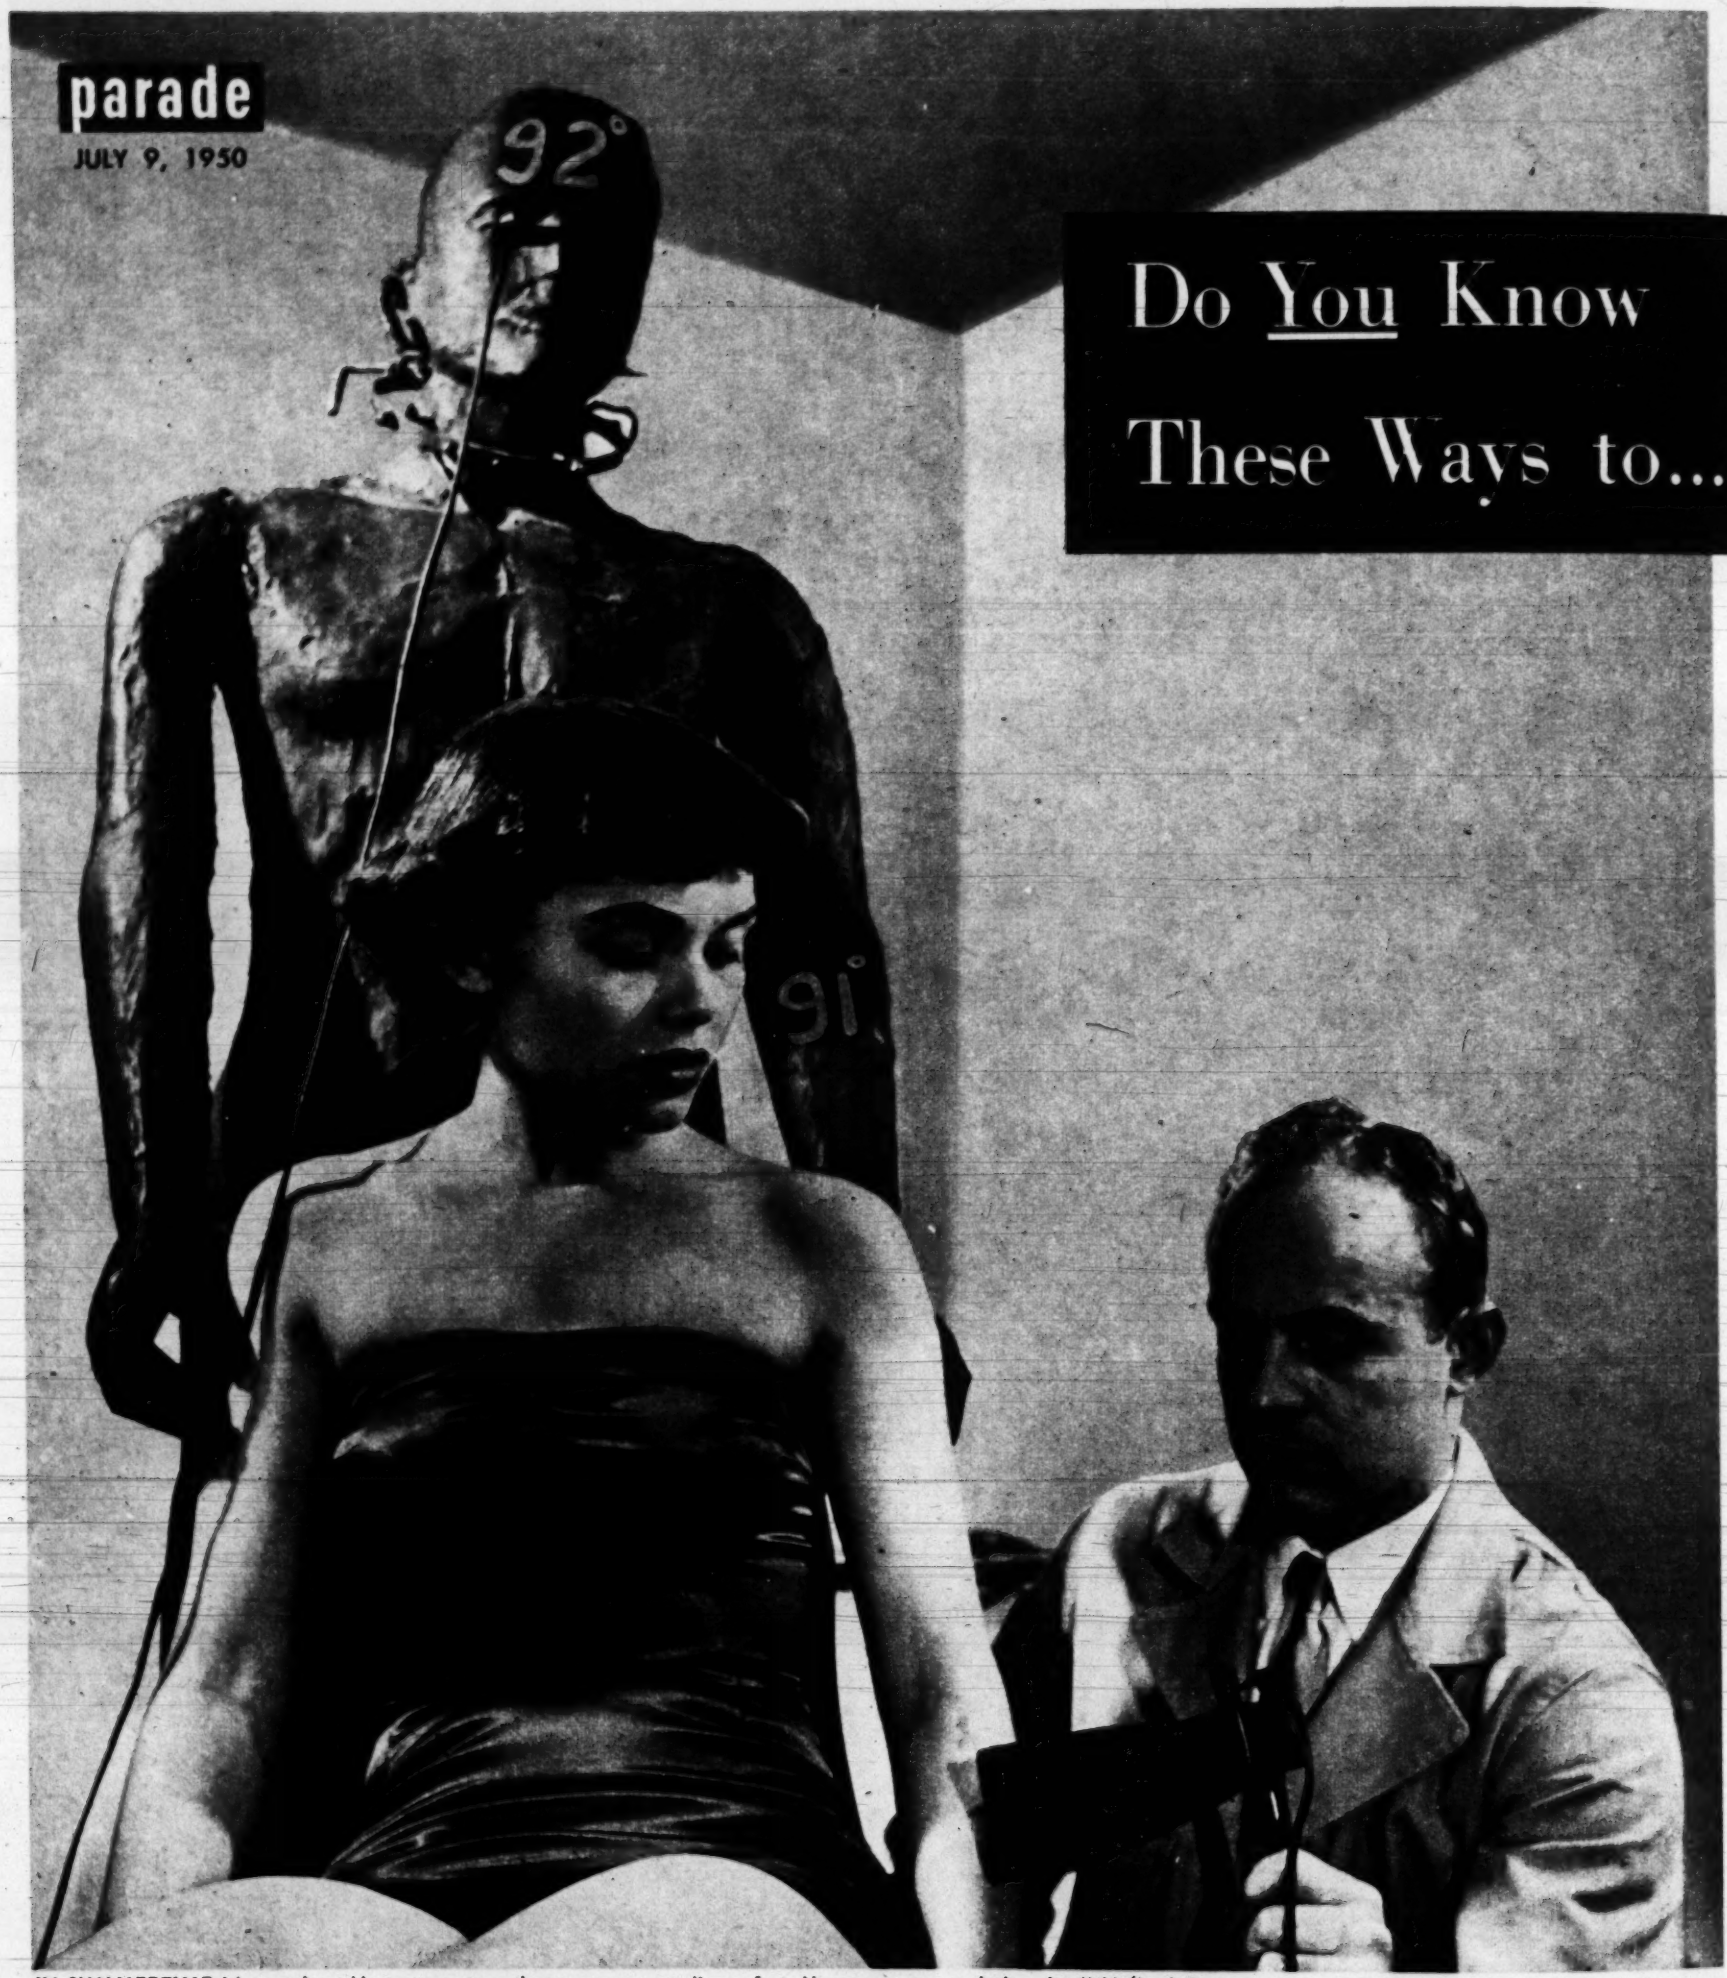
Do You Know These Ways to...



IN SUMMERTIME it's soaring skin temperature that causes most discomfort. Here, biophysicist Norman H. Spear measures skin temperature of model's arm. Numerals on asphalt-paint "skin" of Oscar, an experimental manikin, show ideal temperature for arm, forehead. Your overall skin temperature should average 90 degrees.

By Emile C. Schurmacher

Photographs by ALLAN GOULD

Keep Cool?

MILD EXERCISE helps (see story) by increasing circulation. Here, model's perspiration is measured.

SWEAT TANK on scales enables scientists to measure exact perspiration loss under controlled conditions.

HAS THE HOT WEATHER been getting you down?

Well, it needn't. Just pay less attention to the mounting thermometer, more to your skin temperature!

At the John B. Pierce Foundation Laboratory of Hygiene in New Haven, Conn., there's a nude young chap by the name of Oscar who has been demonstrating scientifically that your own body's "built-in" air-conditioning system can do more than you often allow it to do to beat the heat.

Oscar is not a human being. He's an asphalt-skinned manikin with innards of wire.

He's one of the many intricate devices created by Dr. Lovic P. Herrington, and his associates, to measure the physiological effects of climate on human beings. Dr. Herrington is director of the Laboratory of Hygiene, and Research Associate in Public Health, at Yale.

Just as it is with Oscar, the heat produced by your own body at rest is equivalent to the heat produced by a 100-watt electric bulb. That heat determines your internal temperature—normally 98.6 degrees.

The largest organ of your body is your skin. It has an area of approximately 20 square feet. Its temperature, as shown on Oscar (left), varies for different parts of your body.

You're most comfortable when the temperature of the skin of your feet is near 80 degrees, your thighs near 90 degrees and your trunk and facial area near 95 degrees

Your skin temperature, overall, should average about 90 degrees.

But when the weather really gets hot, your internal temperature may go up to 99.5. And your skin temperature may rise to 95 degrees. That's when you begin to complain.

Before you decide how to cool off, you should know what happens as your body tries to get rid of this excess heat:

Your heart pumps more blood to your legs—one of the most effective regions of your cooling system. This draws blood from your brain. This is why you sometimes feel "woozy" or "faint" with the heat. When this happens, try moderate exercise. Better circulation will lick the woozy feeling.

Here's a list of simple hot-weather rules, suggested by Dr. Herrington, to keep your own "cooling system" functioning at peak efficiency. Some of them contradict ideas many of us have held for years. Others for the first time have been confirmed by laboratory experiment.

• Take a tepid bath (about 80 degrees) for half an hour:

Why a long soaking bath instead of a quick shower? Because it takes time to rid yourself of stored-up excess heat. Cold shower addicts or advocates of a brisk plunge into a chilly lake are deluded by the refreshing feeling which follows. This lasts for a short time. But the cooling effect of a long, soaking bath, Dr. Herrington's tests have shown, can last for hours. If you can't take a bath, soaking your feet in a basin of water will help, too.

• Eat substantial foods—foods to which you are accustomed!

Don't shift suddenly to "rabbity" or spicy diets in hot weather. Substantial food will keep your circulation tuned up, your body well nourished. Changing abruptly to an exotic diet may increase discomfort.

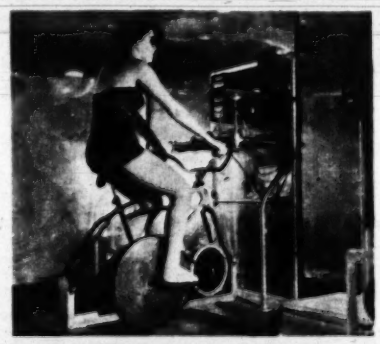
• Exercise lightly—but don't overexert:

Light to moderate exercise, especially walking or light sports involving use of the legs, will increase circulation, chase "wooziness."

If you suddenly feel faint while standing in one of today's oven-like city buses or another crowded place where you're hemmed in and can't walk, try teetering up and down on your toes a few times. It will help. If you feel sluggish while sitting, Dr. Herrington suggests sitting up straight. An old-fashioned rocking chair is ideal for hot weather. Rocking helps the circulation.

• Wear light clothes:

This not only means light-colored (preferably white to reflect, not absorb, the sun's rays) but light in weight.



RUBBER STOCKING collects perspiration from model. Legs are major part of your cooling system.

• Salt pills will help:

Your body's cooling system needs replenishing. You throw off 100 calories of heat per hour. In doing so, you perspire salt as well as water, so in hot weather it is helpful to restock your salt supply. You can do this by taking an occasional salt pill. Just how often is for you—or your doctor—to decide. (For some people, salt may not be desirable.)

Visitors to Dr. Herrington's laboratory are frequently startled by the amount of perspiration a person loses on a hot day. A housewife doing light kitchen work may lose a gallon a day, a man doing heavy work, three!

What kind of beverages should you drink? Water is universally acceptable for restoring liquid lost through perspiration. But such liquids as pop, cola, tea or coffee, containing caffeine, can be helpful in another way. The caffeine in them stimulates circulation.

• Seek out air-conditioned places:

This may sound obvious, but there is more to it than many suspect. Many people complain of "sudden chilling" experienced when going from a hot street to a "cold" movie.

"But actually," says Dr. Herrington, "the temperature in many air-conditioned places may be the same as the street. But the air is drier. Evaporation is accelerated, giving a feeling of coolness."

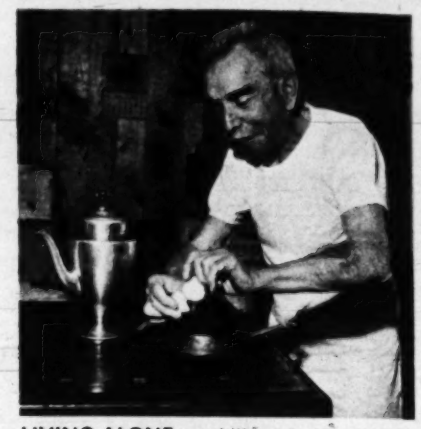
One of the new type home de-humidifiers can be used to keep the moisture in the air at a comfortable level, too.

And finally, Dr. Herrington has one more tip. It's entirely psychological.

Stop looking at that darn thermometer!

Posed by Joan Faas, Grace Downs model.

Oldtime daredevil "Prof." Ivy Baldwin practices for his 100th birthday.



LIVING ALONE, and liking it, "Prof." Ivy cooks own meals at cottage in Colorado.

. . . at 84, he still walks the high wire!

Here's a man who proves that physical age doesn't matter as long as the spirit is young

ALONG ABOUT THIS TIME in 1966, if time is kind, a 100-year-old daredevil may celebrate his birthday with positively his last "Sensational Wire Walk Across the Canyon!"

The daring young man on the flying high wire will be none other than "Prof." Ivy Baldwin, King of the Aerialists in grandfather's boyhood and still going strong at 84.

Now in one of his "temporary retirements" at Marshdale Park, Colo., he is keeping in practice on a wire stretched across his backyard. He made his last "positively last public performance" on his 82nd birthday, but is starting to feel the urge again. Still a trim, steel-nerved 110 lbs. at 5' 3", he is looking forward to that 100 years!

How He Got Started

Age and arthritis have slowed down the human fly whose exploits took him six times around the world and made his name a household word in both Americas. The spirit is still intact.

Few dime novels or movies have been as exciting as the life of the lad from Houston, Texas, who ran away from home in 1878 when he was only 12.

By his own account, he was delivering papers for the San Antonio Express when he met outlaw Cole Younger (one of the Jesse James gang). Younger gave him a $10 gold piece for delivering a message. Ivy, his head full of the headlines about French aerialist Blondin, wanted a pair of green tights.

Buying the tights, Ivy walked a wire 75 feet above nearby San Pedro Lake, to the accompaniment of a carnival band. He became famous almost overnight.

Getting a job in a small, fleabitten circus, the Boy Aerialist found himself stranded in Evansville, Ind., at the age of 14. When the next circus hit town, he lied his way into a job as balloonist and barnstormed around the country swinging from a trapeze floating in the clouds.

Balloon Shot Down

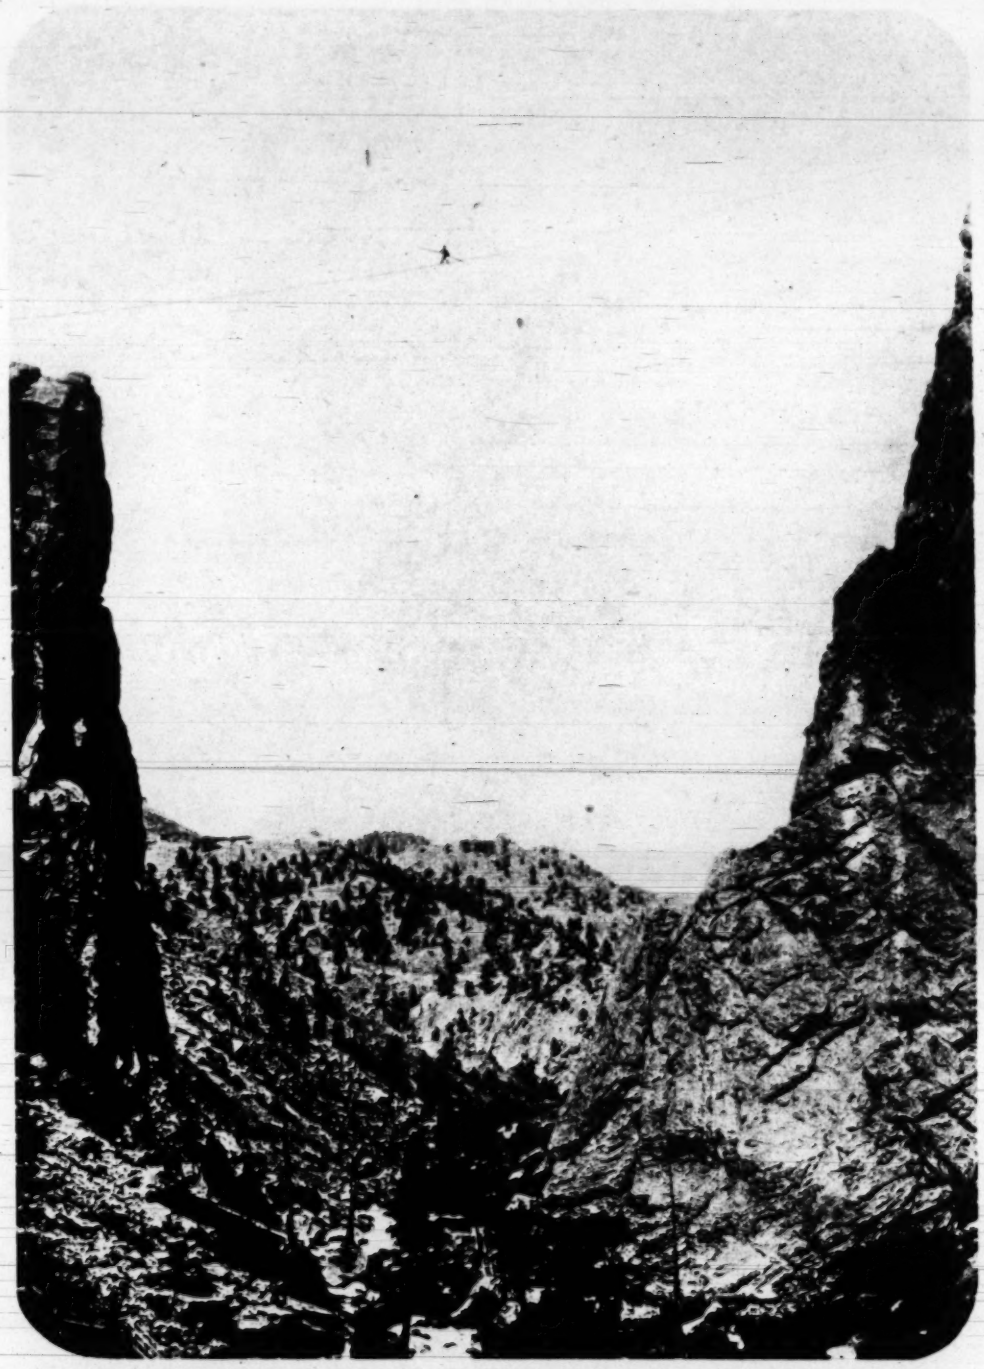
By 1885, when he was 19, he was taking on stunts like crossing 600 feet from the Seal Rocks to Cliff House in San Francisco, without a net. He is also credited with being the second man in America to make a parachute jump. In the early '90s, he and his "El Globo Captivo" (captive balloon) were the darlings of all Mexico. In America, he was known as the King of the "Chute Jumpers." For variety, he perfected his "Pyrotechnical Funambulist Act" (diving from a burning tower) and sliding down a 1,500 foot wire at Denver's Elitch Gardens.

Twice he lent his talents to his country, once as chief scout in the Spanish-American War (he had his balloon shot out from under him at the Battle of Santiago), and in World War I.

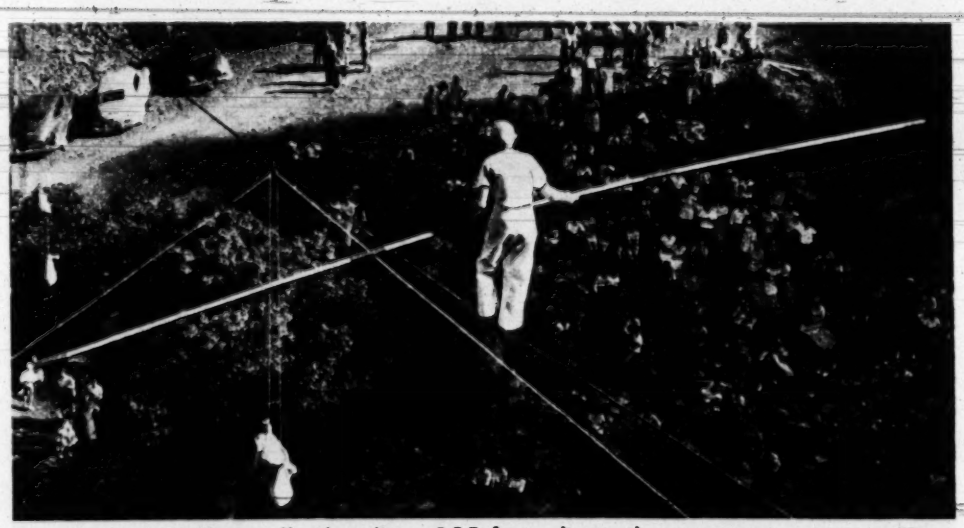
During the '20s, thousands of people flocked to see him perform every weekend at Eldorado Springs, Colo., as he walked 582 feet above the canyon floor. By 1928, his wife (she died two years ago), his two sons, and his daughter talked him into "retiring." In spite of the fact that he had at one time or another, broken almost every bone in his body, he came out of retirement several times.

"Plain Foolishness"

At 84, he is still fearless. Two years ago, when he insisted on celebrating his 82d birthday, he let relatives talk him into walking a wire only 125 feet above South Boulder Canyon (right). "Plain foolishness," protested the Professor. "You can get hurt just as bad at 125 feet as at 500!"



1922: at 56, Baldwin thrilled fans at Eldorado Springs, Colo.



1948: he walked a dizzy 125 feet above the same canyon.

Bayer Aspirin
is Ready To Go To Work!

MAKE THIS TEST!

To see how fast it's ready to go to work, drop a Bayer Aspirin tablet in a glass of water, and time its disintegrating speed. What happens in the glass, happens in your stomach.

Millions of people use Bayer Aspirin for relief when they have an ordinary headache, neuritic or neuralgic pain. This is because Bayer Aspirin tablets start disintegrating with astonishing speed...are actually ready to go to work in two seconds. And these people know this is why Bayer Aspirin brings quick relief.

But important as fast relief is when you're in pain, there are also other reasons why Bayer Aspirin is the choice of so many people from coast to coast.

First, it's remarkably effective. Second, it's wonderfully gentle. In fact, Bayer Aspirin's single active ingredient is so effective, doctors regularly prescribe it for pain relief... is so gentle to the system mothers give it even to small children on their doctors' advice.

So don't experiment with drugs that have not stood the test of time. Whenever you have a headache, do as millions do—use Bayer Aspirin for fast, dependable relief. And when you buy, buy by name. Ask for genuine Bayer Aspirin.

Now...Bayer Aspirin in Children's Size

New 2½ grain tablets (containing half the amount of regular size Bayer Aspirin tablets) provide proper children's dosage as prescribed by your doctor. They're neither flavored nor colored, so they cannot be mistaken for candy. 30 Tablets—25c.

 Because no other pain reliever can match its record of use by millions of normal people, without ill effect, one thing you can take with complete confidence is genuine

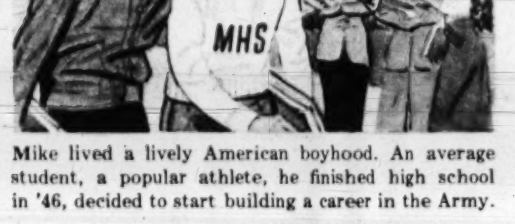
More Men Like Mike!

—men who want to go places, and have plenty of the stuff it takes to get there!



Mike lived a lively American boyhood. An average student, a popular athlete, he finished high school in '46, decided to start building a career in the Army.

Careful studies of Mike's personal aptitudes led to his selection for technical training in tanks and other armored vehicles. He took to it like a duck to water!

Mike could be any one of a thousand typical young career men who are going places in today's Army. He could be you!

Finishing technical school as a Private, First Class, Mike progressed steadily in skill, efficiency and rank. Each year he took a 30-day vacation trip, with pay.

Mike studied, worked, watched his chances. Finished his first "hitch" as a Sergeant. During leave he went home and married his pretty high school sweetheart.

Now, only four years after enlisting, Mike is a Sergeant, First Class, with an assured career ahead. He wouldn't trade places, or future opportunities, with anybody!

150 miles on a gallon of gas?

One driver did it—take a tip from him on how you can save gas . . . BY KARL KOHRS

IF YOU EVER get 150 miles per gallon of gas in your car (and it could happen), you can thank oil research scientists for showing you how.

Right now, in Wood River, Ill., some 30 researchers are tuning up a fleet of their own cars, making special gas-saving adjustments.

These men are scientists and engineers in the Shell Oil Co.'s Wood River laboratories, and they'll test their skill at gas-saving in a "mileage marathon" over a 14-mile highway course in September.

Their goal: to beat the record—150-miles-per-gallon—set by R. J. Greenshields, winner of last year's marathon! Even the loser got almost 40 miles per gallon.

Greenshields and his fellow scientists jockeyed their "souped down" cars along at an average 11 miles an hour.

Top Speed: 20 Miles an Hour

Greenshields, for example, would scoot his car ahead with motor at full throttle until he hit 20 miles an hour. Then he would shut off the motor and coast almost to a standstill.

To decrease tire friction, treads were whittled down to a thin edge, then inflated to a suicidal 110 pounds. To cut resistance more, bearings were lubricated with thin oil.

With the engine running only a few seconds at a time, the problem wasn't keeping it cool, but keeping it hot. So drivers masked radiators (see photo), removed fan belts, swathed manifolds.

DRIVER in 11-mile-an-hour race keeps motor hot enough to run by masking radiator grill.

Outlandish as their driving was, Greenshields and the others simply were exaggerating certain factors of car operation that will some day help save you gas.

As a motorist, of course, you can't file down your tires, coast safely, drive without a fan belt or prod your car repeatedly from two to 20 miles an hour.

But sensible driving, Greenshields says, can increase your mileage per gallon as much as 25 percent. Here are a few simple rules:

- Use moderate speed. At 40 m.p.h. you can get 20 miles to the gallon. At 70, little more than 10 miles per gallon. (The Plymouth Division of Chrysler Corp. reported recently that stock cars, in a 165-mile highway test, saved one gallon in every four when drivers ran at 50 m.p.h. rather than 70 m.p.h.)
- Constant speed: in level driving or hill climbing, it's important to hold a steady speed. You don't gain by gunning at the bottom of a hill.
- Don't stop and start your motor unnecessarily. This uses up fuel.
- The faster you accelerate, the more gas you have to buy! Avoid "jackrabbit" starting—racing the engine in low, second and high. Get into overdrive or top gear as soon as possible. Going into overdrive at 35 m.p.h. will increase your mileage about 8 miles a gallon!
- If you can coast safely (rarely possible), do so. It saves fuel.
- Check your brakes: dragging brakes make the engine pull harder, cost gas.
- Proper maintenance: periodic check on ignition, carburation and lubrication will save you gas money.

For real gas-saving automotive engineers look forward to super-overdrive (high-gear) transmission. It can increase gas mileage, they say, by as much as 90 percent, because the engine runs at lower speed.

But the day of the super-overdrive is ahead. Meanwhile, drive at 40 instead of 70 and cut your gas bill in half!

You can take it with you!

EXHIBIT of modern art, contrasted with that of mental patients, is viewed by visitors to Arthur Brown Gallery.

Sane? ..... or Insane?

How sane is modern art?

The pictures on the opposite page have heated up this familiar controversy. They were put on exhibition recently by Patricia Tate, a portrait painter, at Manhattan's Arthur Brown Gallery. Four are the works of sane, established, modern artists. The other six were painted by mental patients at Massachusetts Metropolitan Hospital in Boston. Look at them closely. Can you tell them apart?

The striking similarity, in the opinion of Dr. Earnest Hooton, Harvard anthropologist, is due to the fact that most modern painters are "in a state of confusion" and the rest are either fakes or imitators.

"I may be old fashioned," he says, "but I believe that the bulk of modern art is bunk."

Everything Is Confused

The opposite view is taken by art critic Alfred A. Brooks who believes that if the modern artist wants to paint confusion it in no way indicates that the artist himself is confused. "He is merely reflecting the times," says Brooks.

However, Dr. Dallas Pratt, psychiatric adviser to the National Mental Health Foundation, feels it is a meaningless waste of time to try to compare true art with the painting of the schizophrenic. This, he feels, harms both fields—modern art and mental therapy.

Now . . . try your luck on the pictures! With a pencil, write "sane" or "insane" beneath each picture and see if you can separate the modern art from the patient's art.

SAUCES WITH SPARK! Extra-smooth and creamy. That's what you can count on with Real Mayonnaise. It's America's favorite! Try Lemon and Orange Sauce for fish: Blend 1 c. Real Mayonnaise, 1 tsp. lemon juice, ¼ c. orange juice, and 1 tsp. grated orange rind. (Yield: 1⅓ c.)

FLAVOR-RICH BINDER! Real Mayonnaise contributes such satisfying flavor to croquettes, meat loaves, hamburgers. Its fine ingredients—freshly broken eggs, added egg yolks, "Fresh-Press" salad oil, mild vinegar and choice spices—add a subtle tastiness that just can't be surpassed!

Pour ¼-inch layer of gelatin into 2-qt. mold. When rest of gelatin is partly thickened, beat fluffy; add ½ c. Real Mayonnaise. Put in mold. Chill. PLENTY of hot cheese biscuits, served with soup, round out the main course. Easy, if you use packaged biscuit mix. Choose a sharp cheddar cheese and use enough—1 c. cheese to 2 c. mix.

CHILLED soup, as a starter for a July luncheon or supper is epicurean touch. This pitcher has a center cylinder, made of aluminum, which, ice-filled, keeps contents cold without dilution.

THIS is National Iced Tea Week. For perfect iced tea, brew should be strong enough — once and a half the usual strength-to stand dilution with ice without becoming insipid. Directions at right.

PERFECT for tray service out of doors or on a cool porch, this luncheon has several delightful features. First of all, it reminds you of the goodness of chilled soup and how easy it is to prepare and serve: to the contents of a can of condensed soup (cream of pea, tomato, asparagus, celery) gradually add 2 cups cold milk. Season with ¼ tsp. salt and ⅛ tsp. tabasco. Beat with rotary egg beater. Chill 1 hour before serving. For bread to serve with the soup we suggest flavorful cheese biscuits, piping hot. You might prefer hot muffins made with a mix, or one of the many varieties of "brown 'n serve" rolls. Now for the tea: make it once and a half the usual strength. Put the tea in a pre-heated teapot; add actively boiling water; steep 3 to 5 minutes; pour over ice. For dessert, cool cubes of honeydew and big, misty cultivated blueberries.

SALLY FORREST meets her dummy for first time; the MGM starlet wears size nine dress.

MGM'S Dummies

Silent and shapely, they play a vital role behind every well-dressed movie

By Kay Sullivan and Sid Ross

ACTRESSES make the most charming dummies. No offense meant, of course. For corroboration, just visit the wardrobe department of any Hollywood studio (that is, if they'll let you—wardrobe departments are full of anatomic secrets and generally are kept under lock and key).

Waiting in chorus girl line-up there, you'll see the world's most perfect dummies. They're the dressmaker forms upon which designers create screen wardrobes. They may have no heads, legs or arms, but they do have body measurements that would make Venus feel awkward.

Who Has the Best Dummy?

At Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, their leading ladies – oops, their leading dummies – are kept in a huge, loft-like room. Each form represents the exact figure proportions of its owner.

Whenever an actress starts rehearsals for a new film, the studio designer at once begins working upon her wardrobe. To avoid time-consuming and tedious fitting sessions, the clothes are made on the dummy that has been modeled exactly to the star's own measurements.

What happens if an actress suddenly gains or loses weight?

"We check weights and measurements very frequently," says Helen Rose, head designer at M-G-M. "If a star has put on a few pounds, she either diets or we add an inch or so to her tummy – oops, again – dummy. This doesn't happen very often though. Even after our stars have had babies, they keep their figures in perfect trim."

Seldom, says Miss Rose, does an actress gain weight while working.

"We have to take in our dummies then," she explains. "The heat and lights and hard work usually make the girls drop two or three pounds."

The gravest problem the dress designers have has nothing to do with avoirdupois. It's a sudden change in the script. Directors have an upsetting habit of switching a scene from a beach to a hunting lodge. They even switch Summer for Winter.

"Sometimes we make a very tight-fitting dress to show off a star's figure," says Miss Rose, "then we find the scene requires her to fall into water or mud! We also have to be careful of 'economic status.' It would be silly to have the wife of a low-salaried man wearing a different dress in every scene."

The stars may not see their dummies very often but they never forget how important they are. Every Christmas, fitters and seamstresses get loads of gifts from grateful actresses who realize that seams and curves must meet prettily—or their public will complain.

An unofficial poll of the ladies who dress the dummies came out thus:

From an athletic standpoint, Esther Williams has the best figure.

For femininity, Lana Turner's figure is the ideal.

For perfect proportions "in miniature," tiny Jane Powell wins.

Collectors scour beaches, mountains and quarries for semi-precious stones

IN THE QUARRIES of Vermont, in the canyons of the Rockies, on Pacific beaches (see photos), the rockhounds are in full cry.

A rockhound makes a hobby of collecting semi-precious stones – agate, amethyst, iron pyrite ("fool's gold"), jasper or petrified wood.

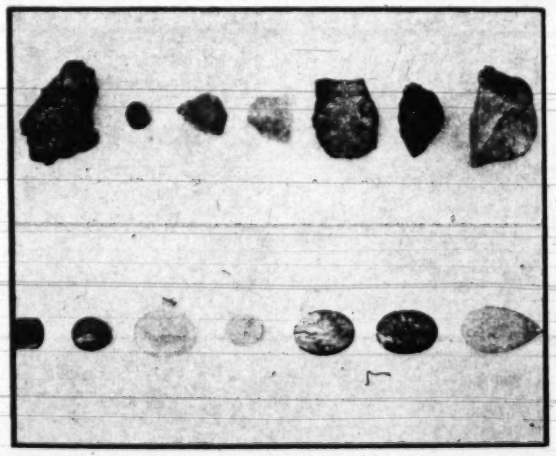
There are about two million rockhounds in the U.S. Organized in hundreds of clubs, they meet for lectures and field trips. Many clubs buy professional cutting and polishing equipment. Members can buy rough semi-precious stones from collectors at from 50 cents to $5.00 a pound.

Occasionally, rockhounds make news. In Wyoming, a rockhound unearthed a 300-pound piece of jade. Two West Coast sculptors, working seven hours a day for 15 months, carved from it the figure of a Chinese woman. It is the largest jade statue in the world and is worth $16,000.

And not long ago, in a New York skyscraper excavation, a rockhound pounced on a nine-inch garnet. It was sold to a gem-cutter for $1,000!

WHAT'S THIS? Two rockhounds find specimen washed up by tide.

FLAW makes stone worthless because it will shatter in cutting.



FINDS: Top row — typical semi-precious stones. Lower row — Similar stones, polished. Total value: about $35.

EXPERTS: Mr. and Mrs. DeWitt Hagar, of Manhattan Beach, Calif., have 10-year collection, cut own stones.

TRY AGAIN! Beach "finds" are rare. Rocks are mainly sandstone.

I WOULD SPLIT HIS SNEERING FACE IF HE WERE NOT SO SKILLED AT OUTWITTING THE PUPPET TROOPS!

LET US REGARD THE FACT THAT WE REALLY TOLERATE HIM BECAUSE THE PRINCESS WILL NOT SERVE AS OUR RALLYING POINT UNLESS HOGAN REMAINS IN POWER — BUT...

—SINCE THE SNOWFLOWER LOOKS WITH FAVOR ON THIS NEWLY COME KIMBERLY YOUTH, I KNOW A THING THAT WOULD CAUSE THEM AND HOGAN TO LOSE FACE!

TELL ALL, FRIEND! MY EAR TINGLES WITH ANTICIPATION

I'M GLAD YOU'RE HERE, MR. HOGAN! I WANT TO TALK TO YOU...

WELL, I'M THRILLED TO MY SOX, REEDY! DO SPEAK RIGHT OUT!

I THINK YOU ORDERED ME TO STAY HOME FROM THE LAST RAID FOR FEAR I WOULD MAKE A GOOD IMPRESSION ON THE PRINCESS!

YOU'RE RIGHT, REEDY—I WAS JEALOUS! THE HOLE THE TRIBESMEN WOULD HAVE SHOT IN THE BACK OF YOUR HEAD WOULDN'T MAR YOUR BEAUTY AS YOU LAY ON THE SLAB!

THEY REALLY MIGHT HAVE SHOT YOU, REED KIMBERLY!

—THEY HAVE NOT ATTACKED MR. HOGAN BECAUSE THEY KNOW I SHALL REFUSE TO LEAD THEM IF HE IS HARMED!

W-WOULD YOU CARE IF ANYTHING HAPPENED TO ME, PRINCESS?

WHY— OF COURSE, REED KIMBERLY

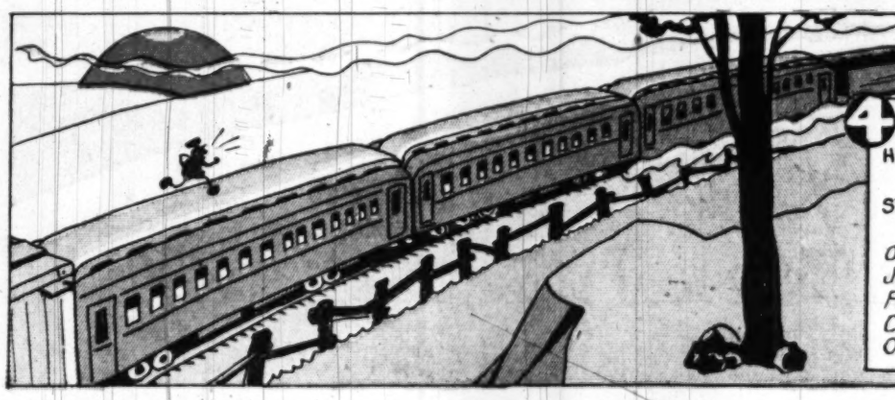
2 "I HOPE WE'RE IN TIME TO SAVE HIM!" CRIES CLOUDY.

THE LOCOMOTIVE AND THE ROCKET ARE THE SAME DISTANCE AWAY FROM THE BOY AS INDICATED BY THE DOTTED LINE. THE PIXIES NOTE THAT THEIR RATE OF SPEED IS THE SAME AS THE LOCOMOTIVE. HAVE THEY A CHANCE TO SAVE THE BOY?

3 ALTHOUGH THE ROCKET CAN BEAT THE TRAIN, THE PIXIES DECIDE THE SAFEST WAY TO SAVE THE BOY IS TO STOP THE TRAIN.

SPUNKY VOLUNTEERS TO JUMP ON THE MOVING TRAINS AND NOTIFY THE ENGINEER OF THE DANGER AHEAD. WHEN SPUNKY JUMPS HE LANDS ON A CAR THAT CONTAINS AN IMPORTANT MINERAL. CAN YOU NAME THE MINERAL?

THE WHOLE ALPHABET IS PRESENT IN THE SQUARE BELOW EXCEPT FOR FOUR LETTERS. PICK OUT THE MISSING LETTERS AND FORM THEM INTO A WORD.



4 "STOP THE TRAIN!" SPUNKY SHOUTS AS HE RUNS FOR THE ENGINEER.

WHILE SPUNKY IS RUNNING LET'S STOP A MOMENT TO SOLVE THIS PROBLEM. THE TRAIN IS RUNNING AT A RATE OF 50 MILES PER HOUR. IF SPUNKY JUMPS STRAIGHT UP 3 FT. INTO THE AIR FROM A CERTAIN SPOT ON THE MOVING CAR, DOES HE GAIN BY THE JUMP, LOSE OR LAND ON THE SAME SPOT?

Answers

(4) HE WILL LAND ON THE SAME SPOT WHERE HE JUMPED FROM

(3) COAL

(2) YES. THE ROCKET WILL BEAT THE TRAIN BY MAKING A SHORT CUT
